Bigger she enjoyed her freelancing because of the freedom it provided. "You choose what you want to write," she explained. "I only write about things that interest me."

Prospective writers also should write about subjects that interest them, she said. "Write something you really enjoy yourself because you'll write it better."

She said the careful choice of topics also was important because writers are asked to speak about their work constantly. Bigger has appeared on several TV talk shows, including "Sally Jessy Raphael," as well as traveling the talk-radio circuit. "I am, frankly, having the time of my life."

Many people might consider their wedding or honeymoon the time of their lives. The couple in the following story probably don't.

On the very first day of their honeymoon at a South Carolina beach, both bride and groom got severely sunburned — so burned that they had to sleep in separate beds all week.

Bigger is confident that her book will appeal to all types of people.

"Just about everybody has been married at least once."

Shabazz

center on the site between Wilson Library and Dey Hall.

Shabazz told the students they should continue to fight and commended them for knowing what they were fighting for.

"I'm not an advocate of anything, and I don't want your administration to say I was instigating anything," she said. "But being of a previous generation, than you, I know that it took students to add to the energy of the struggle."

In her speech Tuesday night, Shabazz praised students for their persistence.

"I hope we are children of the revolution, siblings of the revolution, not just back-seat drivers," she said.

Congress

gress who is not fiscally conservative," she said. "We try to apportion the money we have appropriately among groups, based on merit."

Lloyd said conservative members of congress were more likely to vote against student groups that did not share their ideology, while liberals were more likely to ignore the politics of groups that applied for funding.

Some congress members said they thought the incoming congress would be more likely to allocate funds liberally than those of previous years.

Rep. Eric Pratt, Dist. 22, who was a member of congress during Moore's reign, said the 74th congress had been liberal in its spending policies, but the 75th congress might be more liberal.

Pratt, often labeled a conservative, supported defunding the CGLA.

"I don't see anybody trying to carry the torch of conservatism (in the 75th congress)," Pratt said.

Pratt said he believed the 74th congress had not denied money to any group — a sign congress members were pandering to special interest groups.

"The 74th congress has given money to many interest groups, of which 90 percent are left wing, radicals or Marxists," he said. "Why not give money to people like Rush Limbaugh and make the campus more diverse?"

Some congress members said they believed both the current and incoming congresses were liberal.

Lloyd said the incoming congress will be similar to the present congress, with a majority of quiet liberals and moderates and a small minority of vocal conservatives. She added that being labeled liberal or conservative in Student Congress was different from those designations in national politics.

But not all congress members believe that the incoming congress will be either liberal or free-spending.

Rep. Charlton Allen, Dist. 21, said he believed the incoming congress was more conservative than the current one. "I would almost say that it is a case where people are finally realizing that (the present congress) is liberal," he said.

Allen said that current congress members had shown how liberal they were by their generosity in funding. "Congress has funded every single group that has come before it, but this has been rare in the past," he said.

Rep. Sneha Shah, Dist. 19, said she believed the incoming congress was more conservative than people thought. "I think a lot of the school population thought that once elections had been over, the congress would be less conservative, but I think it will be more conservative," she said.

But Rep. George Battle, Dist. 17, said the present congress should not be classified as a conservative body.

"We have tried to be more representative of the feelings of the student body and not of our own political ideologies," Battle said.

there," she said. "But we know that there were still some injuries reported from the throwing of glass bottles."

Janette Smith, assistant director of Orange County emergency management, said paramedics were called to the scene to treat numerous injuries from broken glass bottles.

"We saw everything from lacerations and bumps on the head to minor stabblings with glass pieces and potentially broken bones," she said.

But most local business owners said the crowd remained relatively peaceful.

Anjana Kennedy, owner of Anjana's, said she thought the crowd was surprisingly restrained, despite some incidences of vandalism.

"My damages were at a minimum," she said. "I don't like the paint on my window, but I feel pretty lucky considering all the people that were out there."

Greg Boston, manager of Rock Art, said: "I would let them do it again for a national basketball title. But I was a little disappointed at the amount of paint my building got and with the two trees that were uprooted outside the store."

Amy Roberts, branch manager for First Citizens Bank, said she expected the damages to be worse.

"I don't think the damage to the street is really that bad," she said. "Someone put a #1 on our glass door, but I'm not too worried about that."

Little Shop owner Pam Niven said she was grateful the damages were kept to a minimum.

"I feel like I got lucky," she said. "There was no paint at all on my windows. The only real damage was to the planters outside the store."

Victory bonfires made their traditional appearances, but Chapel Hill Fire Chief Dan Jones said the cold rain helped limit the number of fires.

"Although I did observe some really intoxicated people dancing in the fires, there were no reports of any burns."

Jones said he was surprised when he heard a radio dispatcher report at midnight that a burning couch was moving down Franklin Street.

"I have worked in the fire business for 19 years, and I've never heard a report quite like that," he said.
