

Volleyball Faces 3 Tough Nonconference Teams

BY RODNEY CLINE

It's not do-or-die, but it is certainly a big weekend for the North Carolina volleyball team.

The Tar Heels, 4-0 after sweeping through last weekend's UNC Volley Preview, welcome three nonconference foes to Carmichael Auditorium. UNC will face Purdue tonight at 7:30, Florida on Saturday at noon and Michigan Saturday at 7:30 p.m.

Florida will be one of the most highly-regarded teams that UNC faces all season. The Lady Gators, 34-2 a year ago, enters play Saturday with a 3-0 record and an No. 8 national ranking, according to the American Volleyball Coaches Association poll.

"Florida finished last year ranked third," said UNC coach Joe Sagula. "On that alone, we can expect a tough battle. We're confident we can do well against them."

Purdue (3-0) and Michigan (2-1) both hail from the Big 10, one of the top two volleyball conferences in the country (along with the Pac-10), according to Sagula.

"Michigan looks to be good," Sagula said. "They beat Washington of the Pac-10, and their only loss was to No. 1 Stanford."

"It's still early, and it won't make or break us. But playing well could really help us."

Purdue won all its matches last weekend.

The Tar Heel attack was paced last weekend by senior middle hitter Cindy Murray and junior swing hitter Katie Gallaway, who were both named to the all-tournament team at the UNC Volleyball Preview. Sophomore Kristin Kruse leads UNC with 3.27 kills per game.

Sagula has several objectives for this weekend's play.

"We want to solidify the ACC as being a strong conference, but we want to help ourselves and impress the NCAA poll people," he said. "We're playing tough competition. As we approach the ACC season, this weekend is an opportunity for us to learn who the Tar Heels are in 1993."

"It's still early, and it won't make or break us. But playing well could really help us."

Why Does Coach Dorrance Look Worried?

Team Set to Play No. 2 Portland

The UNC women's soccer team is riding an NCAA record 59-game winning streak and has won seven straight national championships. So why does head coach Anson Dorrance look worried?

Because the Tar Heels' next opponent are the No. 2 Portland Pilots, perennial bridesmaids who are ready to challenge North Carolina for the top spot.

UNC will face Portland at 3 p.m. today at Method Road Stadium in Raleigh as part of the N.C. State Invitational Tournament.

George Washington University will also compete in the tourney.

"It's a big concern of mine," said Dorrance of the match-up. "Portland is outstanding." Despite last weekend's 7-0 thrashing of Maryland, Dorrance said that he is not satisfied with his team's performance.

"Maryland played one of their best games ever against us, but you'd never be able to tell from the score," he said.

Dorrance said he was most pleased with the performances of junior midfielder Tisha Venturini, who scored two goals in the first game, and the team's freshmen. Two freshmen, Debbie Keller and Jane Byers, also scored against the Terps.

"If we don't play up to a higher level, this team is capable of beating us."

However, Portland coach Clive Charles is not so certain of his team's prowess.

"We're still not ready to play with them," Charles said. "We're a very young team."

"There are a dozen teams that could claim to be No. 2, but there's only one No. 1 and that's North Carolina."

Charles expressed concern over the loss of Tiffany Milbrett, last year's leading scorer. Milbrett, who had 30 goals, is redshirting this season to prepare for the 1996 Summer Olympics.

The last time the Tar Heels were ranked No. 1 and faced No. 2 UNC decked second-ranked Stanford 5-0 last fall.

UNC will play George Washington at 2 p.m. Sunday its second game of the weekend. When asked about facing the Colonials, Dorrance relaxed.

"They don't have the experience that we have, so they don't have the firepower that we have," he said.

Still, the Tar Heels are champions because they don't take any opponent lightly.

Chicago Stadium Should See Wrecking Ball by Late '90s

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Calling it the "end of an era," the owner of the Chicago Blackhawks said Thursday 65-year-old Chicago Stadium will be torn down, but may remain standing for the circus and ice shows until 1998.

William Wirtz said Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus and the Ice Capades have leases to put on shows at the stadium through 1998. He said he is negotiating with the shows to move the events to the United Center, which is being built across the street.

"Eventually though, the old building will have to be torn down," he said. "I don't think it will be good to have two events going on at the same time."

Wirtz left little doubt about his sentiments about tearing down the stadium, where he has seen the likes of ice skating stars Sonja Henie, Barbara Ann Scott, and great fighters such as Rocky Marciano, Joe Wolcott, Rocky Graziano and Tony Zale in action.

"The end of an era is at hand," he said. This is the final year Chicago Stadium will be home to the Blackhawks and the Chicago Bulls. Three Stanley Cup and three NBA champions have played in the building.

Over the years, the stadium has been home not only to circuses and ice shows, but has been the site of several national political conventions.

Wirtz said he is trying to bring both the Republican and Democratic national conventions to Chicago.

"What better place is there than Chicago?" asked Wirtz.
