to the giver to let the person know that the donation is being used.
 Students at UNC are giving the idea of donations in lieu of presents positive reviews.

 Amy Kirkhum, a freshman from Giessen, Germany, said she wouldn't expect a Christmas present from a friend so a donation made in her name would be a nice surprise.

 She said she wished people would donate to charities anyway without waiting until the holidays to use it as an excuse for a gift.

Ash Curtis, a 1993 UNC graduate from Raleigh, thinks it would be great if someone made a donation in his honor.

"There are a lot of people who need essential things more than I need presents."
 Other local organizations have not solicited alternative gift-giving in the past and have not seen donations made in honor of others as frequently as they would like.

At the American Cancer Society, most holiday donations are made in memory of a loved one.

The Orange County Women's Center has not solicited alternative gift-giving but plans to in the future.

Loralei Beer, director of development at the women's center, said, "Giving people the idea helps bring in the donations, and we often find out that it's the way they would like to give."
