

Roberts' final season promises to be most difficult

Mike Roberts isn't answering his phone these days. The UNC baseball coach is in his Boshamer Stadium office, readying for his last spring at the helm. But he won't talk about why he's coming back for a 21st year, back to a job that has become a tremendous chore.

"He really doesn't have anything more to say," someone at the baseball office said. "He's said all he wants in the (press) releases."

Earlier this week Roberts, 47, issued a press release that he had resigned effective after the 1998 season, citing "personal reasons."

He said last season was "difficult," a gross understatement. In 19 years as coach, Roberts' teams never had a losing season. In his 20th, UNC went 29-31 and 6-18 in the ACC — dead last. His players essentially laid down over the final 12 games, winning just two.

This offseason only perpetuated the disaster. Three pitchers left the team, with one quitting and two transferring.

Roberts' growing frustration has stemmed since April 1996. After Maryland beat UNC 12-0 and 11-6 on Easter Sunday, a disgusted Roberts purged himself.

"This is probably the toughest day of my coaching career," he said after those losses. "Wins and losses come and go — I know every year can be a great year — but ... we're not playing with the type of charisma I've always taught at Boshamer Stadium."

His return doesn't make any sense. As a coach, he has nothing left to prove. He won his 700th game in 1996. He can be confident his No. 5 will someday grace Boshamer Stadium's outfield wall.

If he wanted another reason not to come back, all he had to do was ask his players, a significant number of whom are rumored not to be pleased he's staying. They want a change. They expected one. Like their coach, they've grown weary.

When asked to confirm this sentiment, no players would (media training is a very powerful thing). But no one would deny it, either.

"No one really has much to say on it," said one player, chucking at his own discomfort. "It's a tough situation ... I don't think anyone wants to comment."

There will be redshirts. Say you're a talented senior on the roster who doesn't agree with Roberts' philosophy, his style or his personality. Are you more likely to redshirt or play in conflict?

It doesn't end there. Potential recruits will spur UNC, a program in coaching limbo, for teams that have stability. Roberts will be asked to recruit players for someone else's team, with no personal stake in the matter.

There's always the chance that none of this will happen. Roberts might assemble his team before the season and deliver a win-one-for-your-skipper speech that spurs the Tar Heels to a winning season. There might be more solidarity than everyone seems to think.

But there's simply more evidence to support the contrary. UNC baseball is a program in turmoil.

And Roberts thought last season was his most difficult. He hasn't seen anything yet.

Hurricanes sign 2 more as preseason camp nears

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Carolina Hurricanes signed forwards Steve Martins and Ethan Philpott to contracts Thursday.

Martins, 25, had one assist in the two games he played with the Hurricanes last season. He scored 43 points and had 78 penalty minutes in 63 games with the Springfield Falcons of the American Hockey League. He was selected by the Hurricanes as the fifth overall pick in the 1994 Supplemental Draft.

Philpott, 22, had 12 points in 25 games at Harvard University last season. He was originally drafted 64th overall by the Buffalo Sabres in the 1993 NHL Entry Draft.

Terms of the contracts were not released.

The Hurricanes also announced right wing Brent Fedyk accepted a free agent try-out.

Fedyk, 30, scored three points in nine games with the Michigan K-Wings of the International Hockey League last season. He spent four seasons with the Philadelphia Flyers where he scored more than 20 goals in the 1992-93 and 1993-94 seasons. He was traded to the Dallas Stars in 1995.

Carolina will open its first training camp in North Carolina Sept. 10 at the Greensboro Coliseum.
