

Brown Strengthens, Reorganizes GPSF

Mikisha Brown, president of the Graduate and Professional Student Federation, has done a good job of making sure that graduate students' concerns and needs were represented on parking, tuition and child-care issues this year. Brown boosted participation in GPSF Senate through better organization, planning and delegation. But more direct involvement as president in the year's key issues would have been better on the whole.

Attempt to increase representation in GPSF Senate for as many departments as possible	There was a 44 percent increase in GPSF Senate representation this year, and a 23 percent increase in meeting attendance as compared to last year's numbers.	The increases are a welcome and needed improvement from past years. Hopefully this year's greater involvement will aid next year's GPSF president and staff.
Child-care issues	A child-care referendum that raises student fees by 75 cents in an effort to help subsidize the costs of child care was passed by voters Feb. 12.	The referendum is a solid step toward improved child care, and hopefully in the future, the University will be able to offer more services and possibly even a drop-off care facility for student parents.
Fight night parking on behalf of graduate and professional students	A graduate student sat on TPAC, and GPSF held a parking forum to gather student input. They also passed a resolution against a night parking system that went to the BOT.	Parking is not just an issue for undergraduates and faculty, and Brown understood the importance of keeping night parking free for graduate and professional students who study, research or work at night.
Provide graduate and professional students with service opportunities, events and programming	A mentoring program where graduate students are matched with undergraduates had 125 pairs this year, and 24 graduate students tutored at a local school.	Brown kept programming and service opportunities available to graduate and professional students during her term. It's important that GPSF continues to participate in its community and campus.
Ensure strong graduate student representation on University committees	Nearly all external appointments were filled this year, and graduate students had representatives to TPAC, SACC and the Task Force on Tuition.	Brown chose to delegate other representatives to committees like TPAC and the Task Force on Tuition rather than sitting on them herself. While delegation is a plus, as president, a more active role was needed.

Chaney Rebuilds CAA, Term Proves Successful, Productive

Reid Chaney has made significant progress in his term as CAA president. Changes in the ticket distribution policy successfully curbed cheating, a problem that plagued past presidents' terms and tarnished the integrity of CAA. Organization and planning also have added to the success of his term and laid a more solid foundation for next year's president.

Change basketball ticket distribution to curb cheating, promote efficiency and let more students get riser seats	UNC ONE Cards were scanned at Kenan Stadium to obtain bracelets, which eliminated the past problems with cheating. More students were given riser seats, and Saturday ticket distribution ran more smoothly.
Plan, organize and improve Homecoming events by offering a broader range of student activities	Homecoming was successful this year with a week of events, a concert and the first annual Homecoming parade. The king and queen election process was also made more accountable.
Better marketing of UNC's olympic sports on campus	All year CAA has done a better job of publicizing olympic sports events by using the CAA listserv, sandwich boards and the Pit sports ticker. Simple ideas had significant results in this area.
Plan and promote events throughout the year	CAA held many successful events this year, including the Michael Hooker Memorial 5K, Midnight with the Tar Heels, the Slam Dunk Contest and "Beat Dook Week."
Rebuild the integrity and organization of the CAA	Chaney and his staff turned CAA around this year, the new ticket distribution policy and better overall planning strengthened the respectability of the organization for the future.

RHA Stays Steady Under Cooper

As president of the Residence Hall Association, David Cooper has made improvements that make on-campus life easier and more enjoyable through events and programming. Cooper has kept RHA running smoothly this year.

Improve the enhancements program to ensure responsibility and accountability for broken items	Changes in the enhancements program this year were integral and needed improvements for future residents. The money will now go directly to RHA for fixing and replacing items.
Implement more stringent guidelines regarding requests for RHA funds	Last semester RHA mandated that requests for funds be written and a report must be submitted following the event. This change is essential to the proper organization of RHA.
Streamlining policies to make on-campus living better for students	Cooper has improved TV policies and even more importantly had housekeeping duties lists posted to inform students and publicize ways to get emergency housekeeping.
Promote awareness and visibility of RHA through events on campus	RHA had solid event turnout; 300 students attended the Halloween Bash, and RHA reinstated the Late Night Initiative programs. The alternatives RHA offers are key for residents.
Institute a tutoring program for subjects not covered by other campus tutoring programs	The project was worked on all year, but on-campus residents will not see a program until at least next year. RHA should maybe look into working with other campus tutoring programs.
