air at Carolina

"A lot of the friends who were at that same party were in the wedding (including) the friend who had dragged me to the party," Sarah Cohen says.

Other UNC duos meet in more traditional ways, such as Stephanie and Brad Miller, class of '83 graduates who met through a mutual friend their sophomore year.

"I lived in Parker (Residence Hall) and my suitemate had gone to high school with him," Stephanie Miller says.

"He would practice rugby on Ehringhaus Field, and he would stop by Parker to visit my suitemate, so she introduced us."

"We played a lot of racquetball, and our official first date was a movie at (a theater) where Whole Foods (Market) is now," she says.

The two also sat on the bench under Davie Poplar while here. Popular legend holds that whomever kisses his or her sweetheart while sitting on that bench is destined to get married to that person.

The legend proved true in this case, at least.

The Millers' wedding reflected how they met.

"It was like a class reunion," she says. "Because we graduated in May of '83, and then we got married in September of '84, it was just great because there were people that came to our wedding that we had not seen since we graduated and most everybody who were attendants in our wedding had gone to Carolina."

"I guess about 50 percent of my friends probably married someone who went to Carolina," she says.

The two now reside in Chapel Hill.

For those who live and breathe Carolina spirit, such as Lynne and Casey Privette, '01 graduates who met through Carolina Fever, it seems fitting to find fellow Tar Heels to wed.

The Privettes met while they were juniors in the fall of 1999. And while some people complain about campus parking, these two thank it.

"(Casey) was co-president of Carolina Fever at the time, and I was in Carolina Fever," Lynne Privette says.

"I needed a ride to the Florida State (football) game so that I didn't have to park my car on campus, and a friend of ours (said) why don't you call Casey and see if he can pick you up?"

"So that's what happened: He picked me up before the game, and we spent the whole day together," she says.

"We were both at Fever games before that but we never really got to sit down and talk. ... We spent about three weeks being just friends and then decided that we probably wanted to be more than friends."

Lynne Privette says she never thought about finding a husband at UNC, but admits that the way they met makes sense.

"I was never really one to go to bars and go to parties, so it was kind of fitting that I met him at a sporting event."

The added touch of meeting the loves of their lives in Chapel Hill gives Carolina couples a special appreciation for the University.

"There's a certain intangible bond that ties us together, the love of the University — besides the fact that it's real easy to watch sporting events together," Stephanie Miller says.

Sarah and Josh Cohen say they also feel this bond.

"We walk around campus, and we had a lot of memories of times we did this (or that). ... We like the same restaurants. For my birthday, he took me back to Magnolia Grill, where he had taken me for one of our earlier dates — it was really comforting," she says.

"Shared history was really important to us."

Now that Josh Cohen is at graduate school at Duke University, Sarah likes to tease him that "he's gone to the dark side."

"He says his loyalty always remains at Chapel Hill and I think part of that is that it's where we met, so it's a really special place."
