Hey, black cats have bad luck too

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

A afraid of black cats crossing your path? Chances are they won't on Halloween — at least in northern Idaho. The Kootenai Humane Society in Coeur d'Alene is prohibiting black cat adoptions until Thursday, fearing the animals could be mistreated in Halloween pranks — or worse, sacrificed in some satanic ritual.

But not all animal experts think this is helpful to the unfortunately colored felines.

"Black cats already suffer a stigma because of their color," said Gail Buchwald, vice president of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals shelter. "Why penalize them any more by limiting the times when they can be adopted?"

NOTED. Need another reason to vote early? In Denver, voters can select their next leaders in style. A coalition of advocacy groups is offering limo rides to the polls for people who vote early Saturday.

In light of new voting machines, new voting centers and a ballot full of measures, the coalition is offering the door-to-door service to avoid gridlock at the polls Nov. 7.

QUOTED. "I have no idea what I'm talking about. But I don't think you do, either."

— Talk show host David Letterman talking Friday to Bill O'Reilly, the Fox News Channel talk show host, about the Iraq War and the upcoming midterm elections. The two renewed their prickly confrontation from January, when Letterman told him, "I have the feeling about 60 percent of what you say is crap."

Weekend Campus Roundup

Chi Psi volleyball tourney

SASI raises money for student scholarships in sub-Saharan Africa.

Millennium village

A live band from India drew between 150 and 200 people to the Great Hall of the Student Union Saturday night to support the Millennium Village Project, generating between $500 and $750, organizers said.

Three people also registered for a bone marrow drive at the event, which served primarily to raise philanthropy and awareness about the initiative.

The project is a student-led movement uniting several campus student groups as well as individuals and corporations.

An alliance between Duke University and UNC began last semester, and Bennett College announced Wednesday that it is joining the other two universities.

Organizers hope to raise $1.5 million to support a village in Kenya and end poverty there.

Masala dance night

Student group Masala held "A Night Around the World" Friday as part of Family Weekend.

Between 350 and 400 parents and students came to the Great Hall of the Student Union to watch bell dancing, African tribal dancing and salsa.
