That Justice May Ever Have A Champion; That Evil Shall Not Flourish Unchallenged.

Entered at the post office at Warrenton, North Carolina, under Act of Congress of 1879.

In the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it.—Micah 4:1.

We haven't any of us, a very long time on this planet. There are only a few years in which we can make the most of our talents, exercise our faculties for enjoyment and experiences, make life mean something worth having. Yet we do not seem to realize it. We slip carelessly into jobs we do not particularly care about, persuade ourselves that they are important, spend all of our energies doing things that don't really matter to us—and, presently find that the whole performance is about over, with most of the things we really wanted to do left undone.—Bruce Cotton.

FROM THE DAILY PRESS

Probably the most mutually satisfactory war in all history is the one between Henry Ford and General Motors, both of whom seem to be victorious.—Ohio State Journal.

Perhaps Professor Clark is correct in saying that college does not increase a man's income. On the other hand, it teaches him how to live without hats and garters.—The New Yorker.

There are said to be 2,000 women lawyers practicing in the United States. Naturally, with so many of them laying down the law a certain number could be expected to take it up.—Arkansas Gazette.

The Senate Agriculture Committee will begin hearings on farm-relief. And if the Committee hears anything that has not been heard for eight years, past, it will be very distressing.—San Diego Union.

Senator Wesley Jones, who thought up the Jones Law, says that he sees very little drinking in America these days. The last blind Senator he had was Mr. Gore of Oklahoma.—New York Evening Post.

The Mississippi is beginning to behave as if it had never heard of the election of Mr. Hoover.—Lynchburg News.

Leaders in Congress are said to be puzzled over farm-relief. When leaders in Congress cease to be puzzled over farm-relief it will be news.—Boston Transcript.

Now that the weather is milder many of our friends who have a cold bath all the year round have started again.—Punch.

It may be that the delay in announcing what cigaret it was that pulled King George through his recent illness is due to the rumor that the good old boy is left with a little mental trouble.—Ohio State Journal.

CHECKING UP

Even casual reading of papers and slight attention to cars one meets along the highways, convince one beyond a shadow of a doubt that the officers of the State should be more diligent in enforcing the automobile laws. Some relief may come from the new highway patrol bill, but with only its handful of men, the bulk of enforcement will rest upon the sheriffs, deputies and police officers of the State.

Entirely too many cars are being driven with one light and with poor brakes. Count the one-light machines any night; take occasion some time to watch the manner in which some cars are stopped—showing plainly poor brakes. These conditions exist—and, of course, the sections providing for a "signalling device" and for "a closed cut-out" are as flagrantly violated though as a rule the consequences of such violations do not attract general attention.

Source of True Comfort

The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for April 21.
The Source of True Comfort, Isaiah 40:1-11.

WITH this lesson we begin the study of a portion of the book of Isaiah, from the fortieth chapter to the end, which most of the outstanding Old Testament scholars of the present day regard as the work of a prophet whose identity is not known, who lived about 150 years after the time of Isaiah. The writer of this latter portion of the book is often referred to as "the Second Isaiah." It has been suggested that he deliberately chose to keep his identity unknown, wishing to emphasize his message rather than his own personality. He describes himself here as "the voice of one crying in the wilderness."

It should not be necessary to point out that the idea of the book of Isaiah as consisting of two parts does not affect the moral and spiritual teachings of the book or its value for our time. Most careful students of the book would, in fact, claim that this view has greatly clarified and enhanced the teaching, as it is in studying the latter portions of the book in relation to the events of this later period that we appreciate the full significance of the teachings. Is it not only as we succeed in relating the prophecies to their own time that we can adequately grasp their meaning for our time?

Whatever conception of the book one may have, it seems perfectly clear that the chapters of Isaiah from this lesson on relate to the period of Babylonian captivity. We have seen that the Northern Kingdom—the Kingdom of Israel—fell in 722 B. C., and that the 10 tribes of that kingdom were dispersed never again to have their kingdom re-established. In 538 B. C., that is, nearly 200 years later, the southern kingdom of Judah fell before the power of Babylon, and its people were carried off into captivity.

In this instance, however, there was a restoration of the kingdom, as every student of the Old Testament knows, and a recolonization of Palestine by the Jews whose return from Babylon to their own land was made possible by a later ruler.

Manifestly during this exile in Babylon the faith and spirit of the people were sorely tried. How could the conception of the people of Israel as chosen and called and as having a great destiny, enshrined in the promise to the patriarchs, be seriously regarded when the kingdoms of Israel were broken and the people weakened and dispersed? It is under these conditions that there arises in our lesson and in the prophecies which follow the conception of a spiritual Israel—a faithful remnant, which, even in exile and in suffering, is fulfilling the deeper purposes of God. And it is interesting to note that it is in this period that Old Testament prophecy attains its highest moral and spiritual value.

It is because of this deeper study of the problem of suffering in relation to Providence and the development of the conception of God's will as being effected through sacrifice and loss that these prophecies have been regarded as prophetic of the coming of Jesus and his work through his life and death. The teachings begun in this lesson bring us into the very heart of the later teachings and experiences of Jesus, through whom these prophecies were fulfilled.

right, and we hope that the officers will give attention to its enforcement. The highways are thick with people who travel in cars and on foot. Both have a right to the full protection of the automobile law—which is not having its rights properly safeguarded and will not until the officers in the give more thought and time counties of North Carolina to this actual and imperative police duty which their oaths of office require.

TAKE HEED

From the tobacco association, from the cotton co-operatives and brokers, from the dealers in peanuts comes a warning "do not overplant." To this admonition, we may cull a paragraph from President Hoover's address to the Congress on Tuesday:

"There was a great expansion of production from our marginal lands during the war, and upon these profitable enterprise under normal conditions can not be maintained. Meantime, their continued output tends to aggravate the situation."

Thus the President points out that over-production means small monied return, and adds the weight of his influence to the words of others in close touch with the farm situation. He points out further, "That the difficulties of agriculture can not be cured in a day; they can not all be cured by legislation; they can not be cured by the Federal government alone."

It seems the part of ordinary common sense to read the lesson, to contemplate the results of an "all monied crop" system, and for the farmers to take due care that the food for the family and the feed for the stock is produced at home. Of course, there is the alternative, tried so many times without profit and without honor, which is represented in the point of view of some farmers, "Well, I'll let the other fellow cut down his crop, let him follow such advice, and I'll ride in big with my monied crop."

That point of view has had much to do with the plight of agriculture today, and it is time for our farmers, men of good sense, to take another path of approach toward prosperity. That path, clearly marked and defined by the lives of farmers in many sections, leads to the broad road of diversification.

Let us hope that more farmers embark upon it each year. The "hog and hominy" doctrine may not be as popular as some but experience has proved it more profitable. Long enough we have chased the elusive pot of gold, supposed to be always at the foot of the "rainbow of monied crops."

U. D. C. Chapter Gives Praise To Members

The Warren County Chapter U. D. C. wishes to pay loving tribute to the memory of two beloved members who have recently been called from our midst; Mrs. J. M. Gardner and Mrs. W. T. Alston.

Our Chapter has suffered a great loss in the passing of these two daughters. Their places will be hard to fill.

They were, both, for many years, among the most active of our workers, Mrs. Gardner having served as president and Mrs. Alston vice-president.

Each was an ideal officer; always at her post of duty, serving with unusual diligence and ability.

Mrs. Gardner was a charter member. Mrs. Alston was transferred from Oxford when our chapter was in its infancy, therefore they walked side by side among us for many years and fell from our ranks during the same week.

We shall greatly miss them but shall ever cherish the memory of their presence and their works.

Our hearts go out in sympathy to their bereaved families and we pray our heavenly Father in his love and mercy, to watch over and comfort them.

MRS. N. M. PALMER,
MRS. FRANK ALLEN,
MISS IDA ALLEN, Committee.

CARD OF THANKS

We want to thank each and every one for the many acts of kindness and sympathy shown us during the accident of our dear boy, Lewis Jr., and also want to thank every one who remembered him in so many ways while at the hospital. Your kindness and sympathy will never be forgotten.

MR. AND MRS. LEWIS WHITE

CARD OF THANKS

I take this method of expressing my thanks and appreciation to all friends both white and colored for the many acts of kindness shown during the illness of my little girl Ethlyn Burrell Falkener, and for words of sympathy and beautiful floral tributes at her death.

MRS. MABEL P. FALKENER.

Union county is turning to the dairy industry and farmers are planting pastures and buying foundation stock to begin the work.
