County Is Fortunate

Warren County is indeed fortunate that the Carolina Biological Supply Company is to establish its combined research laboratory and farm within three miles of the county seat, on the farm where its president, Dr. T. E. Powell was born and spent his youth.

It is nice that the county is to have such a worth while complex, which should make a definite contribution to the economic life of the county, and it is also nice that one of Warren County's most successful citizens will again resume his ties with Warren County.

Dr. Powell left Warren County as a young man, and for that reason is not too well known to Warren citizens except by reputation, but many of our citizens remember with pleasure his father and mother, the late Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Powell, who lived for many years at the old Powell place just beyond a branch on the old Airport Road.

Mr. Powell was the brother of the late John B. Powell, who for many years was postmaster at Warrenton. His son, Ben Powell, still lives at Warrenton. Another first cousin of Dr. Powell is James Harris of Inez, whose mother was Mr. T. E. Powell's sister-in-law.

Friends of the family here, and citizens generally, not only wish for Dr. Powell and his company much success with their enterprise here, but hope that it will serve to draw a former citizen back home.

Let Planes Track Speeders

The Goldsboro News-Argue

Bills have been offered in the Legislature to allow the State Highway Patrol to use airplanes in its fight to reduce accidents on the highways.

The measure, if approved, would correct a serious error in judgment made by the General Assembly four years ago. At that time the legislators approved a measure which banned use of airplanes in bringing charges against speeders. The argument was illogical, holding that to "spy" on a speeding vehicle from the air was "unfair". It was a piece with the reasoning which persisted long after the electric eye had become common use in tracking down speeders.

No longer is there any objection to the electric clock speed catcher. And there will be general approval of the proposal to give the Highway Patrol back its wings.

Motor Vehicle Commissioner Pilston Godwin has quietly been clearing the way for an easy trip for the bills through the Legislature. He had given or offered trips in the Highway airplane to show the honorables just how efficient are planes in reducing the speed mania on the roads.

Psychologically the return of the Motor Vehicle Commission's planes to speed patrolling would be excellent. Suppose you were driving along a highway and had forgotten the speed laws. You hear a plane above you and instinctively you slow down. You do so to make certain that the plane is not the Motor Vehicle patrol plane.

Much support in favor of correcting the mistake of four years ago has been drummed up. Unless there is a major change, the bills to restore use of airplanes in safety patrol duty will get quick approval.

Meddlesome Bureaucrat!

St. Louis Post-Dispatch

As the years race by we reflect often on our collegiate career, invariably recalling that F in trigonometry and that D in Latin. To those alphabetical indices of an idly-spent youth we have long attributed our subsequent modest measure of success. There is simply no limit to what we might have become had we but applied ourselves remorselessly to the rigors of Pliney the Elder and logarithms, we have grown quite fond of telling ourselves.

Our accustomed reverie has now been shattered by a report from Edwin J. Shoben, Jr., who bears the formidable title of director of the Commission on Academic Affairs of the America Council on Education. Mr. Shoben says that an analysis of 50 independent studies shows there is no correlation between good grades in college and later success. It would probably be just as well if Mr. Shoben's finding did not receive wide dissemination on college campuses, but that is not what bothers us.

If there is no correlation between good grades and later success, the corollary would seem to be that there is no correlation between poor grades and later failure. If this be so, Mr. Shoben, with one cruel kick, has deprived us of the crutch we have been using all these years to explain our lack-luster performance in the great arena of free enterprise.

Now we are forced to cast about for another source of consolation, since it was not our good fortune to have been the product of a broken home or to have had a domineering mother, we'll have to fall back on the fact that we were a nursery school dropout. It isn't nearly as comforting as our F in trigonometry and our D in Latin and for that we fully intend to blame the meddlesome Mr. Shoben.

What does it cost to heat ELECTRICALLY?

HENDERSON: "I'm well pleased with electric heat's all-round comfort and low cost," says Mr. Charles Anderson about the electric baseboard heat in his 2,000 square-foot home. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson also have an electric range, refrigerator, water heater, washer and numerous small appliances in their all-electric home. Their total annual bill for electric service, including the cost of flameless electric heat, is $388.09.

ROUEMONT: The E. E. Aikens enjoy all-electric living for less than a dollar a day. The Aiken's new seven-room home contains 1,450 square feet, warmed by electric baseboard heating. The five members of the Aiken family also enjoy an electric water heater, range, refrigerator, freezer, well pump and many small appliances. Their total annual bill for electric service, including the cost of flameless electric heat, is $319.45.

COMPARE for YOURSELF!

OXFORD: Mr. and Mrs. William L. Roller and their teen-age daughter are kept warm with a combination of electric baseboard and ceiling cable heat in their 1,800 square-foot home. The Rollers also use a variety of electric appliances, including a range, freezer, refrigerator, air conditioner and water heater. Their total annual bill for electric service, including the cost of flameless electric heat, is $319.16.

NASHVILLE: The three-year-old home of Mr. and Mrs. Elbert Roberts is heated by electric baseboard heating. The 1,140 square-foot home also contains an electric washer, range, freezer, refrigerator, water heater, air conditioner and water pump. Their total annual electric bill, including the cost of flameless electric heat, is $245.59.

It's easy. Just select the home that most nearly matches yours in size, number of occupants and use of appliances. Write down the total cost of electric service for 12 months.

Now, add up all of your fuel and electric bills for the past twelve months and compare the two. This will give you a good idea as to the economy of electric heating as a part of all-electric living.

We can show you many case histories of homes in this area using flameless electric heating. And we will provide you with other vital information, such as estimated operating costs for your present home or one you may be planning.

Call, write or stop by the GP&L office nearest you and ask for full details on matchless electric heat.

Closest housewarming ever — it's flameless!
