of wise spending in the health field? A current publication, "Your Money and Your Life" published by the U. S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare - Food and Drug Administration, discusses some of the fake treatments and products which are on the market today. If you would like a copy of this bulletin, you may get one from the Extension Home Economics Agent's office.

This publication is a government report on fakes and swindlers in the health field and is intended to steer people away from quackery and toward getting good medical treatment. Health swindlers have a way of coming out in new disguises. Often they pretend to be new scientific discoveries. Or the promoter is seeking to cash in on something new that people have been reading about, like radiation or atomic energy. It is easy to believe in medical fakes, especially if you are sick or worried.

According to the publication "Your Money and Your Life," "quackery cheats you of your money. At least $1 billion a year is spent on falsely promoted, worthless or dangerous products. Over $500 million is wasted on unnecessary or falsely represented vitamin products and so-called health foods."

"Older people, especially are likely to be victimized by quackery. Chronic diseases like arthritis provide the richest market for quack treatments and products. A national survey has shown that arthritic patients are spending $250 million a year on misrepresented remedies."

"Worse than the financial loss is the danger that reliance on some ineffective product will cause delay in getting proper medical treatment. This can have very serious consequences."

"There are many medicines in the market which have a limited value - for example, they can relieve minor aches and pains - but the advertising of some implies they cure. Such products may be a good buy if you don't expect too much or pay too much for them. Be sure to read the label and any circular enclosed in the package. This information is required by law to describe the product truthfully, tell you how to use it safely, and effectively, and warns against harmful effects."

"Modern quackery is very widespread. It shows up in best selling diet books and 'health' magazines as well as in advertising for many kinds of dietary foods, vitamin products, 'miracle' cosmetics, drugs and gadgets for treating everything from excess fat to cancer."

Are you going to be a victim of quackery? Become informed and spend your money wisely.
