Needs Another Hard Look

The joint meeting of the Lions Club and Woman's Club at Colonial Lodge last Friday night proved to be both an enjoyable and instructive affair and thanks of those present should be extended to W. R. Drake, Lions program chairman, for staging the program. Dr. Leo Jenkins, president of East Carolina College, is an excellent speaker and has proven himself to be an able administrator as is witnessed by the growth and development of East Carolina College. It is always a pleasure to have Dr. Jenkins visit our county as well as Senator Julian Allsbrook, who so ably presented the guest speaker.

While we were among those listening with interest to the views expressed by Dr. Jenkins and in spite of the admiration we hold for Dr. Jenkins' considerable abilities, his message leaves us considerably disturbed by the implications raised in his seeking to obtain independent university status for East Carolina College. This is a matter about which we have considerable reservations, not shared by many able men in Eastern North Carolina.

That East Carolina College is already a considerable factor in what Dr. Jenkins calls the renaissance of Eastern North Carolina, is not to be denied; neither is it denied that this institution will be an increasing factor in the cultural and economic life of this region, regardless of whether or not it obtains university status.

However, we are a little disturbed about the independent university status sought in preference to such a university being a part of the Greater University concept towards which we lean; and even more disturbed by the thinking behind the independent university concept for Eastern North Carolina. The idea, which seems to be prevalent, that a people who do not approve the teachings and discipline of a State University, should be allowed to create a university closer to the culture and beliefs of the people of this region, seems to us to be but another step in the provincialism that has so long cursed both the state and the South. What we would like to see is not an Eastern North Carolina University, but a North Carolina University located in the East. This lacks a lot of being the same thing.

Regardless of what type university is established at Greenville,

Dumpling War

Christian Science Monitor
What's this? Helmut Winter, a normally peaceful man, a graphic artist by trade, taking on the mighty German Luftwaffe and the American Air Force to boot?

But, wait, that isn't the half of it. He chose as his weapon the Roman ballista (resembling a crossbow on wheels). And the missiles he fires at the planes swooping low over his home are none other than homemade Knodel (or dumplings).

Following his determined and dramatic bombardment, Herr Winter announced the signing of a truce with the Luftwaffe. Its pilots have promised to keep their roaring planes at the prescribed altitude above his suburban Munich home.

But he says he is "still on a war footing with the United States Air Force and the NATO planes that come overhead." He asserts that American jet-powered helicopters have come over as low as 150 feet. His fifth-century "cannon," which he modeled on a toy instrument, has an effective range of about 180 feet.

Herr Winter, with his flair for the dramatic, obviously expects newspapers to broadcast to the world his hot dumpling war against the thundering jets. His cause is just. His means calculated to accomplish his editorial purpose. The world's press could not resist his dumplings. We seriously doubt if the American Air Force and NATO will be able to hold out much longer.

and eventually some type university will be established there, in time it will reflect the liberalism of other great universities of the state and nation or it will not be a great university. If the same kind of thinking that caused the state to leave the union because it could not agree with the union's views is again to be reflected in the establishment of "our own" university because of disagreement with the state university, it seems to us that we have learned but little from history.

Whether or not we are right in our assumptions, certainly this is a question of deep concern to all our people and should not be rushed into too hastily, for more than a question of the establishment of one university is involved here. Certainly, the report of the Board of Higher Education, released at noon Wednesday, should receive careful study before any precipitated action is taken, and no doubt will be. What we would like to see is for proponents of an independent university status for East Carolina to take another hard look at the concept and its implications.

Of Interest

We note with some interest that six of the twelve outstanding senior girls who won Katherine Smith Reynolds scholarships at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro attended the Governor's School in Winston-Salem, which may be a tribute to the work of this school founded by former Governor Terry Sanford.

Among these girls who attended the Governor's School in 1965 is a Warrenton girl, Miss Beverly Johnson, a senior at John Graham High School. The award is a compliment to both Miss Johnson and John Graham High School and we extend to her our congratulations and best wishes.

Jenkins

(Continued from page 1) said, pointing out that this year the college is taking care of 1400 more students than provided for under the State budget.

Disagreeing with those who doubt that East Carolina is ready for university status, Dr. Jenkins said that there are always those who say that it cannot be done. He cited the opposition to the establishment of a Methodist College in Eastern North Carolina and the making of Louisburg College a four-year college (sic). But this has been accomplished, he added. At East Carolina, he said, they were told that they never could build a stadium and that a field house would cost too much, and that a school of nursing was not practical, but each of these objectives have been accomplished to the gain of the college and all Eastern North Carolina. He also said that it was said that East Carolina College would not be accepted by the Southern Conference, but it is now a member of this conference and that the international swimming and diving contests could not be obtained by a small college in Eastern Carolina, but that the contest would be held at East Carolina by schools more interested in people than in elaborate equipment.

There are always those who said that it cannot be done, Dr. Jenkins concluded. And there are those who said that East Carolina College can not be made into a good university, but it can be and should be done.

The average farmer in the United States uses his tractor about 700 hours a year.

Snow's great for kids... but it doesn't get the laundry done.

There's a crunch under foot. The wind ruffles the leaves and a fine powder of cold, white crystals sprays the air and stings the face. It's a beautiful day for doing the laundry... if you have a flameless electric dryer. Electric dryers make any weather drying weather and any time drying time. Two quick steps from your washer to your dryer and the chore's done. Remember the low cost of electric drying, too. An average load can be dried for a nickel or less. That kind of economy is hard to beat. Make a clean break with the past. Buy an electric dryer. See all the new models at an electric appliance store.
