Wise-Paschall Ruritans Hold Ladies Night

The Wise-Paschall Ruritan Club held Ladies Night on Thursday night, Oct. 16, at the Lakeside Steak House in Henderson. H. V. Massengill, local manager of Carolina Power and Light Company, was the guest speaker.

W. C. King of Wise, publicity chairman for the club, said yesterday that the Wise-Paschall Ruritan Club has decided to sponsor a Halloween Carnival at the Wise School building on Thursday night, Oct. 29. He said entertainment is being planned for persons of all ages and that many turkeys will be given away to lucky persons. The public is urged to attend.

Some plants have, obviously, been killed completely and must be replaced. On the campus I observed 12 Helleri hollies dead under one redbud tree. They could not compete for moisture with the deeper roots of the redbud. We also lost five out of six Helleris in another location with no tree root competition. They were in full sun and the water loss through the leaves by transpiration was very high. With no soil moisture to counter-balance the loss of water through the leaves, the plants could not survive. So much for plants that have died.

What about the plants that were less severely damaged by the drought? A dead shoot or limb here and there. One-third of the plant affected, etc. How to handle these plants is our problem.

Nancy Paschall was elected president of the Wise-Paschall 4-H club at the club's regular monthly meeting held on Monday night at the Wise school building.

Sharon Moseley, retiring president, called the meeting to order. The 4-H Pledge was led by Steven Moseley; the Pledge to the Flag by Marvin White; and the 4-H Motto by Robbie Paynter.

The members decided to invite parents to the next meeting.

GARDEN TIME
M. E. Gardner
N. C. State College

What effect will the long summer drought have on ornamental trees and shrubs? This question has been asked many times and there is no satisfactory answer that can be given. Some say: prune heavily, keep watered and fertilize and the plants will make a quick recovery and be as good as new. This, simply, is not true as I will try to point out.

Most home gardeners have observed that some plants are more subject to water deficiency than others. The reason for this is the fact that some plants have the ability to hold (bind) water more than others.

We should remember, too, that we have the cold winter temperatures ahead of us and that the effect of freezing is very similar to drought damage since, in both cases, water is removed from the growing tissues.

Since we do risk the chance of cold damage to plants already drought damaged, I would suggest no drastic pruning at this time. I would, however, suggest that dead shoots and limbs be carefully removed from drought damaged plants back to live tissue and that no pruning be done beyond this treatment until growth starts in the spring.

The plants will do their best to overcome the injury by putting out new (adventitious) buds to replace damaged areas. When this occurs, you will be in better position to prune intelligently.

I would lightly fertilize the plants in the spring, mulch, and keep them watered.

Expert Offers Points On Growing Camellias

Severe cold often means the end of pretty camellia blossoms in North Carolina.

But an extension horticulturist at North Carolina State University says that this doesn't have to be so.

The horticulturist, Henry J. Smith, says camellia growers can do two things to increase their chances of having good blossoms in spite of winter cold damage.

"First, you should be careful in selecting varieties," Smith said. "Second, you should set the plants in a location that will give them a fighting chance to escape winter injury."

Smith pointed out that camellias flower at different periods, extending from the fall through the spring. The chances of having good blooms are better if a person selects varieties that flower in either the fall or in late winter or early spring. The objective is to avoid the severest winter cold.

Some fall-flowering, early-blooming varieties are: September Morn, Dikagura, High Hat, Marie Shackelford, Morning Glow, Mrs. K. Sawada, Are-Jishi, and Yohel-Haku.

Some medium-early varieties are: Empress, White Empress, Latifolia, Lady Clare, and Professor Sargent.

Some late-flowering varieties are: Finlandia, Blood of China, Herme, Sara Frost, Flame, Flame Variegated, Elegans, and Leucantha. These varieties produce blooms in late winter or early spring, and they usually perform nicely even after the coldest winters.

Kumasaka, Ville de Nantes, Lady Vansittart, and Rev. John Drayton flower just as winter begins to warm into spring. Pink Champagne produces blooms very late in the season.

Smith said that completely double varieties, such as Pink Perfection, are usually more susceptible to cold injury than varieties with loose petal formation.

Smith had these suggestions for selecting a place to locate camellias:

Always keep in mind that plants located in full sun are more likely to be injured by a sudden cold spell than plants in a semi-shaded location.

If you are using camellias as part of your foundation planting, locate them on the north side of your house. This location offers winter shade.

Plants that are protected from the winter sun, especially morning sun, usually withstand more cold than those with a southern exposure. The northern exposure provides a more even and constant temperature.

East or West exposures are good if there are trees, large shrubs, houses, a fence or wall nearby to give some shade and protection.

Camellias benefit if protected from winter winds. Such cold winds can "dehydrate" plants, causing them to be more susceptible to cold damage.

If there are tall pine trees in the yard, you have an ideal place for your camellias. They appreciate the broken shade, overhead canopy of protection and you have a natural "built-in" source of mulch.

If you have had difficulty getting camellias to survive, try purchasing large established plants, two or three feet tall. They often will transplant and live with greater ease than smaller plants, Smith concluded.

Recent visitors of Mrs. Calvin H. Harris and family included Mr. and Mrs. Clifton H. Harris and Cindy Harris of Durham, Mrs. W. B. Harris and Elizabeth Anne Harris of Petersburg, Va., Mrs. Eva Sal-

In Memoriam

In memory of Robert Holt Shearin written by his daughters, Brenda, Kaye and Faye. Here we stand at a familiar grave, And we know that this dear soul was saved. For the soul of this person was good and true, Faithful, honest, and loving too. This great man never shed a tear, He was humorous, jolly, and full of cheer. In spite of pain and troubles, he'd always smile. He loved everyone, especially a child. He was not wealthy or held a famous name. But we loved him dearly just the same. He always had time for our problems and needs, He gave us praise for all our simple deeds. He was a hard-working and generous man. His daughters are now his biggest fans. Yes, this man is the greatest friend we've ever had, For buried in this grave is our beloved dad. He left us with memories of him so sweet and kind, But that's not all he left behind. He taught us to worship our Father above. He taught us how to give and how to love, And even though he's gone to a better land. We'll remember these things and we'll never forget this man. The greatest friend we've ever had, Buried here, our beloved dad.
