ticket and tried to hold the bus until Telesilda arrived. At the bus, Mrs. Norman asked Telesilda to hold Bryan while she and Jeannette went back to the car to get the rest of the luggage.

When they got back, there was no bus, no Telesilda, no Bryan.

A closer look revealed that the bus had not left, although the driver tried to do so.

Spanish-speaking Telesilda would not sit down. Instead she stood in the aisle, holding the baby and crying. It was only after Mrs. Norman, equally frantic, climbed aboard the bus to retrieve her youngest son, that the driver understood what was happening.

In the two weeks she was with the Normans, Telesilda had learned to love them. Even so, she didn't think she should leave with the baby as a souvenir, Ann Kanipe, assistant home economics extension agent, Yadkin County, reports.

Colors Are Emphasized In Fashions

RALEIGH - As you shop this fall, you'll find colors in women's fashions seem to emphasize the heather, funky or dusty tones. For example, the browns you see this year are mid-browns rather than the deeper darker tones.

The yellows are more directed toward the yam and pumpkin tones. A golden orange called Chessit is also important, along with polished copper, an orange that borders on the brownish-red family.

According to Dorothy Barrier, extension clothing specialist, North Carolina State University, "reds favor the terra cotta or brick tones." Some reds tend to be orangish, while others such as Roman Tile, are very red indeed. And in the family, the Bois de Rose and Vin Rouge tones continue strong.

Purples will filter down from the red family, the specialist observes. Vega Violet, with strong red overtones and the clear, real purple will be strong.

Blues are on the upswing again. There will be less navy blue this fall season, but the medium or cadet blue is important. Also very important is the grayed, slate blue. And there's some turquoise and a lot of teal around.

You'll find greens are deep and blue or bright. Some move to the yellow of a vine green, but concentration still is on the darker shades, the specialist says.
