Pictorial History Is Proposed

A pictorial history of Warren County may be published if funds from the North Carolina Bicentennial Commission are forthcoming.

The possibility that the book can be published was raised Monday in a memorandum from Richard E. Hunter, Jr., chairman of the Warren County Bicentennial Committee, to W. P. Jones, chairman of the Warren County Board of Commissioners.

Hunter disclosed that the local Bicentennial Committee has made application for financial support and hopes to include pictures taken in recent months by Mrs. Catherine W. Cockshutt of the Survey Section of the Department of Archives and History.

Hunter reported to Chairman Jones that Mrs. Cockshutt, who has submitted a section of Warrenton as an historic district, has offered her photographs as well as her knowledge of architecture to assist the county in publishing the proposed book.

Hunter further reported that Mrs. Cockshutt will present a slide program on historic preservation at the Warren County Courthouse at 7:30 p. m. on February 23, and that persons interested in Warren County's historic preservation are invited.

In outlining the plans and projects of the Warren County Bicentennial Committee for the first six months of this year, Hunter wrote:

"Work has been completed on the smokehouse at the Nathaniel Macon Homeplace and the contractor, Kenneth Copley, has been paid. The work has not been inspected by Mr. A. L. Honeycutt of the Department of Archives and History but it is felt the work will pass inspection and no further major restoration work is planned on that building.

"In October of last year the Warren County Bicentennial applied for a grant from the North Carolina Bicentennial Commission for financial help with the archaeological work at the Buck Spring Project. It was learned last week that the application had been approved by the North Carolina Bicentennial but must be sent to Atlanta for approval from the regional office of the American Revolution Bicentennial Commission before we receive any money. This money ($3,025.00) can be used to help match part of the $22,500 matching grant that the General Assembly gave the Warren County Bicentennial Committee last year. The archaeological work at Buck Spring will be one of the focal points of Bicentennial Activity in the county this summer.

"During the summer months of 1975, the Bicentennial Committee had two girls employed through the Neighborhood Youth Corp program do historical research. These girls typed the minutes of the Bute County Committee of Safety minutes that are on file in the Archives and History Building in Raleigh. The Warren County Bicentennial has asked the North Carolina Bicentennial for money to have these minutes published. Once these minutes are published the Bicentennial Committee plans to sell them to raise money for the Buck Springs Project.

The Bicentennial Committee is planning on having a fund raising event set up for April 4th., the first Sunday in April. This will be our major event for the Spring. The Bicentennial Committee is going to have a Brunswick stew lunch and sale and have the school children from each of the county schools have Bicentennial exhibits.

Ms. Susan Simmon, Arts

Commission's Third Century Artist, will have a visiting artist and his works on exhibit. A tour of some of Warrenton's homes is also planned with a map pointing out the places featured in the historic district of Warrenton. The proceeds of this event will go toward helping match the state grant given to the Nathaniel Macon Homeplace," Hunter reported.

Conservation Corner

News of the Warren Soil and Water Conservation District by James Q. Wooten, District Conservationist, SCS.

Charles Woodhouse, district biologist with the N. C. Wildlife Resources Commission, stopped by the Warren Conservation District office last week to deliver application forms for wildlife planting materials available this spring.

These wildlife planting materials are free and are provided by the Commission on a first-come, first-serve basis. Both annual and perennial seed mixtures are available as well as a limited supply of shrub seedlings. Planting these plant materials on your land will boost the amount of food and cover available for wildlife; the two key factors making up any wildlife habitat.

Many farmers and landowners take advantage of this opportunity to improve the wildlife habitat on their land by getting and planting these seed materials each year. If you would like to receive these materials for your land or find out more about this program, stop by the District's office in Warrenton or call 257-3836. Personnel there will be happy to help you decide how much and what types of materials would be best suited for your location.

With as many ponds as we have in Warren County, we have an excellent opportunity to increase the amount of waterfowl in our area, woodduck populations in particular. Woodduck nesting boxes are easily made and when mounted on an old tree or post in your pond can provide a shelter from which dozens of ducklings can be hatched over a period of just a few years.

I picked Charlie Woodhouse's brain last week and found out that it is not too late to put up a woodduck box and expect an occupant for it this winter in time for spring hatching of baby ducks. You will need to build your box correctly if you want a woodduck to use it because I am told that the woodduck enters his home flying at full speed, which will startle you when you first see it. Easy to follow plans and designs by which you can build a woodduck box are available from your local Conservation District Office. Some scrap lumber, a few nails and a little of your time and you can really "be kind to your web-footed friends."

You have probably heard something about "catfish farming" and may have wondered how you "farm" a fish. A booklet available from your local SCS-SCD office entitled appropriately enough, "Catfish Farming," tells what it's all about. Although catfish farming may never replace soybeans and tobacco it is a growing business nationwide and is worth learning more about.

I hope you can see through this weeks column that a lot of "different" kinds of information are available through your local Warren Conservation District office. Although we devote our greatest efforts to soil and water conservation we must not overlook our other natural resources such as wildlife.

PET... Cornell Chirila Jr., of Overland Park, Kans., holds Sadie, a 350-pound, 17-foot long Indian Python in the basement of his parents home. Chirila has other pets also, among them are alligators, lizards and frogs. His parents would prefer he give them to a zoo.

Witnesses Planning Fayetteville Meet

Kenneth Read, presiding overseer of the local congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, this week announced plans to attend the assembly in Fayetteville on Feb. 14 and 15. The theme of the Assembly is "Become Doers of the Word." Through the two days of the assembly program, emphasis will be placed on how to assist people to use their Bible and to keep ones faith active.

The highlight of the program will be Sunday afternoon at 2 p. m. for the public talk, "Are You Doing What God Requires of You?"

All meetings are free and the public is invited.
