Fertilizer, Lime Costs Are Up $700 On Tar Heel Farms

RALEIGH—The average Tar Heel farmer spent $1,690 for fertilizer and lime in 1974. This was $700 more than he spent in 1973. Despite all cost-cutting efforts his bill for fertilizer and lime jumped from 7.9 percent of total production costs in 1973 to 12.2 percent in 1974—a small percentage change but collectively it amounted to $106 million. This sparked an interest in soil testing that continues even though fertilizer prices have declined somewhat since 1974.

A. L. Hatfield, agronomist with the soil testing laboratory, Agronomic Division, North Carolina Department of Agriculture, cited some statistics to emphasize the demand. "The number of samples tested for farmers and homeowners, compared to pre-1975 testing, increased 30 percent in 1975, 60 percent in 1976, and through November testing for the 1977 crop is 105 percent ahead of normal.

"I know some people tire of our enthusiasm and statistics but we have been telling them for years that they should try it. Apparently they are trying and liking it," said Hatfield.

Supplying fertilizer and lime for North Carolina is a multi-million dollar business. For the 1976 crop year the equivalent of more than 717 thousand tons of 33.5 percent ammonium nitrate, 333 thousand tons of 45 percent superphosphate and 677 thousand tons of 60 percent muriate of potash was sold. Add 1.2 million tons of agricultural lime and the farm price tag was close to $225 million.

"Soil Testing is not a sure-fire method of reducing total fertilizer costs" Hatfield declared, "but it is the best method we have to get the right kind and amount where it will return the most profit."
