

Organizational Meet Held At Cokesbury

An organizational meeting was held Friday night at the home of R. C. Daniel to discuss and plan a volunteer rural fire department in the Cokesbury community. Interested citizens of the community have been hinting at possibilities for about a year.

Temporary officers, elected to draw up a charter, included chief and president, Sanford Faucette; assistant chief, William H. Pegram; captains, R. C. Daniel, Mike Coghill, Phillip Rice; secretary, Charles H. Flood; and treasurer, J. H. Hamm.

Elected to the board of directors were Bobby J. Choplin, Melvin D. Abbott, Erwin Spain and Billy McCann. Eddie Jackson was selected as maintenance chief. Sanford Faucette has contributed one acre of land for the building site. He journeyed to Raleigh on Tuesday to obtain details necessary for building purposes and organizing the department.

Fire Damages

Home On Rt. 2

A fire of unknown origin was extinguished with water at 9:05 on Friday night after damage to house and contents were estimated at 80% of their value.

The frame home was occupied by Ola Wilson on Route 2, Warrenton, and owned by Ed Turner.

The Warrenton Rural Volunteer Fire Company dispatched 14 men, one truck and a crash wagon to the scene where they assisted the Afton Company in extinguishing the fire.

On Monday, Feb. 21, the Warrenton Rural Fire Department dispatched six men and three trucks to the scene of the Friday night fire in response to a grass and woods fire which the firemen extinguished with water.

The firemen reported that the fire was started by a grass fire ignited by fire from the frame building.

Deer Hunters Plentiful

us own any land; it is just loaned to us for a while."

F. P. Whitley, rural mail carrier, said that he knew that he was in the minority, but that when the deer season opens he always breathed a sigh of relief when he returned safely to the Warrenton post office. This was because of the hazardous way in which the hunters parked their cars, often he would have to wait until trucks were moved in order to continue his travels with the mail. He said he was gratified to see one truck bearing a sign urging all deer hunters to park on the same side of the road.

Mrs. Panthea Twitty said that she feels that the trucks are a hazard and told of an incident where sharp application of her car brakes was all that saved her from injury from deer hunters' trucks entering the highway from a side road in the path of her car.

Her husband, Henry F. Twitty, told the group how hunting was conducted from stands at the annual hunts at Butner.

Speaker after speaker pointed out that in Halifax County where hunting from the road is forbidden there were three hunting deaths last year, but that there had been none in Warren County; that they felt that roadside hunting offered an opportunity for older citizens to enjoy hunting, and that they felt it is a great deal safer to be on the road shooting into the woods instead of being in the woods shooting toward the highways. They said that they felt that the use of rifles was safer than a shotgun as the rifleman had to see his target in order to aim, whereas the shotgun hunter often blasted away.

The proponents of highway hunting admitted that there was some illegal parking, but those who park illegally should be arrested by the highway patrol and/or local law enforcement officers, they said.

George Hunter, who lives in the Arcola section where there are many deer, said that he favors hunting from the highways, but he had a rule that no rifles could be used by those hunting on his property.

Matt Nelson, Jr., who farms a 2000-acre tract of land, said that he was both a farmer and a deer hunter and could therefore understand the problems of each. He said that he had deer hunters send their dogs across his land, and abuse his property in other ways and his son narrowly missed being shot by a deer hunter who blasted away. He said he felt that there was a great deal of misconception about this danger of hunting with a "high powered" rifle, in reality a "high velocity" rifle. Most of these are the same calibre as the army rifle.

He quoted from a card issued by an arms manufacturer. This rifle, he said, would shoot for a distance of two miles, but in order to do so its barrel would have to be elevated. From the time the bullet leaves the barrel it begins to drop, and this increases as the bullet loses velocity. Therefore, he said, a rifle aimed at the height of a deer would have its bullet strike the ground in a short distance.

Shortly after Nelson's remarks those present cast their votes in favor of not changing the law.

Following the meeting the commissioners received a number of petitions concerning deer hunting regulation. Manager Charles Hayes said yesterday that more than 200 of these petitions favored no change in the present law, and 11 favored changes in the law.

Muzzle Loaders

Though they have modern weapons, hunters in the mountains of Pakistan's North-West Frontier use muzzle-loaders more than 100 years old. The reason is economy. National Geographic says. A rifle cartridge costs about 40 cents, but powder and lead for a muzzle-loader cost only 2 or 3 cents a shot.

New Fabric Process Keeps Out Wrinkles

A new process for treating cotton makes popular denim fabric wrinkle-proof and shrink-resistant.

The process, identified by the trademark "Sanforset," has met with such good consumer response that there is already a shortage of the material.

Fabrics treated by the process are currently available from only one mill, but others are planning to install the equipment necessary to duplicate the process. Several manufacturers of jeans and leisure wear are already using the material in a number of their garments.

"This new process will make the care and maintenance of denim clothing much easier for mothers," says Judith Walker, extension clothing specialist at North Carolina State University.

The process involves applying cold liquid ammonia to cotton fabrics, followed by compression of the fabric to reduce shrinkage and remove wrinkles. It leaves the fabric with a soft and comfortable feeling.

Young buyers will be pleased to find out the treated fabric fades faster than regular denim to achieve the faded look currently popular in jeans and other denim clothing.

The process was developed by a Norwegian company and is licensed to a company in the United States. This is only the second year that "Sanforset" fabrics have been available here.

Textile mills will probably next adapt the process for use on corduroys, but in the future it could be used on sheets and dress shirts.
