

Price Is Speaker At Arts Meeting

The month-long celebration of National Art Month by the Warrenton Arts Commission came to a close on Friday night as the commission presented Reynolds Price at the final series of "Friday Night at the Depot."

Price spoke to a capacity crowd at the Warrenton Depot, recently remodeled by the Women's Club. He read his first serious writing, "Michael Edgerton," a short story he composed as a freshman at Duke University. This story is now taught in most high school English courses. Later he read some Bible stories he is translating into readable narrative from Hebrew or Greek.

Price commented on his impressions of the South and the Carter White House. He related that his phone rang constantly during the fall with calls from New York reporters wanting information and definitions about our southern lifestyle. He commented that the south is the most interesting part of the country, "the wickedest and the best."

The free film series set for March 6 has been cancelled. "Gaslight" scheduled to be
