Clothes Change Helps Warming

Keeping warm this winter is as easy as changing your clothes.

Replacing lightweight garments with heavier ones can make a greater impact on keeping you warmer than you realize, says Judith Walker, extension specialist in clothing at North Carolina State University.

A woman who wears slacks instead of a skirt and puts a light long-sleeved sweater over her blouse will feel as comfortable at 67 degrees as she previously did at 70.

A man who replaces a short-sleeved shirt with a long-sleeved one wears a t-shirt and a tie, and replaces ankle-length socks with knee-length socks can keep himself 2 degrees warmer.

Adding a light long-sleeved sweater will add another 2 degrees of warmth; a heavy one, 3.7 degrees.

Several layers of lightweight clothing will keep you warmer than one heavy layer because air is trapped between each of the layers. This air is heated by body heat and, in turn, insulates the body.

Contrary to popular belief, tight clothing will not keep you any warmer. It will, in fact, inhibit circulation so that the body will not warm itself as efficiently.

Natural fibers such as cotton and wool will allow perspiration and body moisture to evaporate from your skin, which is essential for keeping warm.

Putting on a hat or scarf will help to warm up all areas of the body. Almost 90 percent of the body's heat loss is at the head. When the heat can no longer escape, it goes to other areas of the body.

Be sure your clothes are clean and dry. If the air pockets in and around fabrics are filled with water or dirt particles, they cannot hold the warm air and will not insulate the body.

Wear clothes which fit close at the wrists, ankles and neck—places where warm air might circulate with cold and escape. A belt at the waist or a tucked-in blouse will help trap air in that area of the body.

Make an old umbrella look practically new again by brushing the fabric with a solution of ammonia and warm water.
