

Defendants Fail To Appear For Trial

Residents Ask Better Facilities

A delegation of Washington Street residents made a plea for road paving and the installation of a fire hydrant during Monday night's regular session of the Norlina Board of Commissioners.

About ten residents of an unpaved street that snakes in and out of the eastern limits of town urged commissioners to give attention to their request for paving a road which has been a problem for the residents and board members alike.

Obviously the outgrowth of a farm trail, the narrow dirt road is part inside, part outside the town boundary. Compounding the problem is the fact that the road in places is just 14 feet wide, a fact that Commissioner Jimmy Overby contended would bar Norlina from legally proceeding with improvements.

Thomas Manson, a resident of the area for 40 years, said he was "tired of eating dust" and said that dust stirred from passing cars entered his house and soiled clothes. He told commissioners he "would appreciate anything you can do."

Just what Norlina can do remained in question as Monday night's meeting wore on. Overby suggested that commissioners tour the area and Mayor Bill Perry authorized Town Clerk Mae Gums to contact the town's engineering firm to see if a proposal to cut a new street into the area would be feasible.

Also to be discussed with the engineers are prospects for installing a fire hydrant in the area, which is now served by nothing larger than a two-inch line. In fact, commissioners were told, several hydrants in town are connected to two-inch pipe, making their effectiveness questionable.

John Jenkins, Washington Street resident, amplified the call for a hydrant, saying that a fire in the area would result in the loss of homes.

In a related matter, Mildred Mason of the Warren Plains Road-Washington Street area expressed a desire to have the town connect her trailer to water and sewer lines, a project estimated to cost $275. She said that HUD was willing to pay her $90 monthly to help defray living expenses, but that she could only pay for the connection in installments.

Commissioners later took no action on the request, saying that to act favorably would be in violation of a town ordinance which calls for advance payment in full for utility tap-ons.

Edelia C. King has been elected worthy matron and Larry M. Walker, worthy patron, of Norlina Chapter 158, Order of the Eastern Star.

Newly elected officers were installed by officers from Chapter 199 in Henderson. Hazel Lane installed the officers with Sue Robertson installing the marshal, Rowell Lane installing the chaplain; Sallie Harris, the organist; Odell Stainback, the Warder and Minnie Gill installing the Sentinel.

Following the meeting everyone enjoyed a social hour with J. Edward Allen being honored on his 90th birthday.

Norlina Board Wants This Old Building Removed

Norlina Landmark May Be Auctioned

A Norlina landmark which has alternately been described as an eyesore, a firetrap and a rat-infested health hazard could find itself sitting on the auction block in less than two months.

A two-story frame store building and a smaller companion structure owned by the late Mrs. Mamie White stirred talk of condemnation Monday night during a meeting of Norlina commissioners.

The building, built as a store and last used as the Norlina library before books were taken into a remodeled train car which now serves as the town library, was described by Mayor Bill Perry as a health and fire hazard. Leigh Traylor, speaking for the town fire department, said that should the building catch fire "there would be nothing we could do. As a matter of fact, there wouldn't be anything two fire companies could do."

The problem is accentuated by the fact that Mrs. White, who died several years ago, left her property to charity, and a trustee must be appointed to handle the sale. Traylor has been suggested as the logical trustee, and Monday night Board Attorney Jules Banzet said the process to qualify Traylor, advertise the property and conduct the auction might be done in about 45 days, barring an upset bid.

The commissioners were advised by their attorney not to take condemnation proceedings, but to await the sale, since it was probable that a new owner would either raze the building or restore it to meet health and safety standards.
