Fire Ants

If an ant hill is disturbed, an army of defenders scuttles out to repel the intruder. Each ant grips a pinch of skin with its mandibles, then arches its back and jabs a dozen times or more with its stinger. Victims may receive several thousand stings within seconds of being attacked. The stings raise burning blisters and sometimes trigger an allergic reaction that can send a person to a hospital in shock. Tales of fatal attacks and of the ants killing chicks, piglets and calves are exaggerated, but the insect hordes can damage crops and orchards. The ants do some good, however, killing ticks and flies that bother cattle and insects that damage sugar cane.

Scientists believe the tropical fire ant has reached the limit of its northern range and is unlikely to move further north. Neither will it go away, particularly since Mirex, the pesticide most often used to kill the ants, is being phased out as an environmental hazard. A Florida entomologist who has worked on the fire ant problem admits: "We couldn't eradicate this thing with an atomic bomb."

Will There Be Condominiums Over Those White Cliffs Of Dover?

England's White Cliffs of Dover, romanticized by Shakespeare and bombarded by the Nazis, have caught the eye of Telly Savalas, among other actors. Savalas was high bidder on a lithograph of the chalky cliffs at a recent auction to raise money to preserve the adjacent farmland from encroaching real estate development.

The Queen Mother of England had donated the lithograph to the Los Angeles fund-raising event, which attracted several actors who appeared in the wartime movie, "White Cliffs of Dover." National Park Proposed Anna Lee, former British film actress and chairman of the fund drive, says the land, mostly owned by individuals, is the target of developers with visions of condominiums, hotels, and restaurants. The fund-raisers hope to make the land on the cliffs' edge a park.

"The national park plan would leave the area looking as it did when Julius Caesar saw it," she told the National Geographic Society.

Donations are going to Britain's National Trust, which plans to buy up the 12 miles of remaining coastal land. About $500,000 is needed. It was 55 B.C. when Caesar's invasion galleys landed near Dover—then known as Dubra—and were repulsed by stone-throwing Britons. Caesar's forces landed at nearby Deal instead.

Comes With Age
Mutton is meat from mature sheep usually more than two years old.

English Channel from France, the cliffs were the scene of later attempted invasions. The Vikings failed in the 10th and 11th centuries, but the Normans succeeded in 1066.

Neither Napoleon nor Hitler successfully overcame the cliffs, although Hitler's Nazis chipped away at them with bombs and shells in World War II until the site became known as "hell-fire corner." For much of the war thousands of Dover residents took refuge in the cliffs' labyrinthian caves, protected by 180 feet of chalk.

Life went on in the caves: Couples were married; babies were born. The caves were the only home some small children had known.

Four years and 2,226 artillery strikes later, in September 1944, the Germans' guns were silenced. The toll of dead and wounded was about 500, far less than it might have been without the caves' shelter.

Hidden Treasures
The cliffs took on new significance in 1962 when a slope under an ancient Norman castle slipped, revealing three layers of civilization dating to the Iron Age. Archeologists worked alongside the remnants of war—gun emplacements, searchlight holders, and barbed wire.

The site later received attention from the National Trust, which in 1975 made a worldwide appeal for funds to protect the land from developers. The United States, among other countries, responded, meeting part of the goal.

Many Americans were already familiar with the cliffs of Dover. They had heard Bing Crosby sing about the bluebirds returning there in his World War II hit and had read Alice Duer Miller's novel in verse, "The White Cliffs." Or they had read Shakespeare's description of the cliffs in "Richard II" as a "fortress built by Nature for herself/Against infection and the hand of war....."
