

Added Emphasis To Be Given Education, Health Board Told

Health Education will be given strong emphasis in the future in Warren County and will be combined with chronic disease screening clinics in a two-pronged effort to improve community health.

That was the message given members of the Warren County Board of Health meeting in quarterly session at the Health Department Monday night.

The commitment to health education was outlined in a report of department goals and objectives given by Ms. Carolyn Klyce, health director, and Lennis Retzlaff, county health educator.

Additional efforts will be made to fight childhood disease through an improved immunization program, Ms. Klyce reported. She said that immunization levels for childhood diseases have reached dangerously low levels, and that although Warren County's immunization level is high in comparison with other North Carolina counties, approximately one-third of the children under five living in the county have not been immunized properly.

She also stressed the need to develop a comprehensive venereal disease detection and treatment service available to any citizen of Warren County. She said some strains of venereal disease have appeared which are resistant to penicillin, although no report of the new strains have been found in Warren. Ms. Klyce said that by the end of August her department hopes to develop venereal disease services for men.

Members of the Board of Health were told that Health Department personnel are preparing to increase their efforts in detecting early the symptoms of hypertension and diabetes.

Board members gave unanimous approval to a statement of goals outlined by Ms. Klyce.

Highway Patrol Reports Three Warren Wrecks

The Highway Patrol reported three accidents in the county during the weekend. Saturday morning an accident was reported on SR 1235 about three miles south of the Norlina city limits. Louise Durham of Rt. 2, Norlina was charged with driving left of center when her auto struck a car driven by Elizabeth Kilian Bender.

Damages to the Bender auto were estimated at $1,200 and $450 to the Durham car. Bender was reportedly injured during the mishap and taken by ambulance to the hospital.

Charges of driving left of center were also lodged against two other motorists in separate accidents on Sunday. Maude Gill Duke of Middleburg failed to see a car turning left, applied brakes and veered across the center line hitting a car operated by Edward Lee Blanchard of Winston-Salem. The incident occurred in Manson on U. S. 1.

Damages were set at $450 to each vehicle. The patrol reported that Duke complained of pain following the accident but had no visible sign of injury.

Glenn Ray Riggan of Macon crossed the center line and sideswiped a vehicle operated by James Kenneth Pernell of Rt. 2, Warrenton. The accident occurred on SR 1133 about nine miles south of Warrenton.

Riggan was charged with driving left of center. Damages to his auto resulted in $250 with $300 in damages to Pernell's car.

Prevent Mildew By Taking Steps To Meet Threat

Anyone who has had clothing damaged by mildew will agree that precautions against it happening again are well worth taking. Molds causing mildew have a liking for moisture, darkness and warmth, says Judy Walker, extension clothing specialist at North Carolina State University.

Unfortunately, clothing stored during muggy summer weather is a perfect setting for mold growth. Cleanliness, good ventilation and a dry atmosphere are effective weapons against closet mildew. Because soil on clothing can supply nutrients for molds, clothing should be thoroughly washed or dry cleaned before storing.

Clothes should be hung as loosely as possible to permit air to circulate.

Shoes, suitcases and other leather goods should be stored on shelves.

Chemicals to dry the air can also help combat mildew. Silica gel, activated alumina and calcium chloride, often sold under trade names, help control growth by absorbing moisture from the air.

Silica gel and activated alumina are not harmful to fabrics and can be hung in cloth bags in closets, placed in open containers on closet floors or spread in the folds of clothing.

Calcium chloride can be placed in open containers in closets. However, it should not come into contact with fabrics since it can make holes in them.

Paradichlorobenzene, often used for moth control, also controls mildew, but since it damages some plastics, you should remove buttons, ornaments and not use plastic hangers if you use this compound.

Electric fans will help to keep air circulating around your clothes and an electric bulb burning in a small closet will prevent the darkness molds like.
