

Arson Is Suspected In Fire On Tuesday

Fire destroyed a two-story frame house at 421 West Franklin St., Warrenton shortly after 10 p. m. Tuesday. Arson is suspected in the blaze, the second to occur at the house in less than a month. Fire Capt. Walter Gardner of the Warrenton Rural Volunteer Fire Department said police were questioning several suspects in connection with the fire. When firemen arrived, the house was engulfed in flames. The house, vacant at the time of the fire, was owned by Georgia J. Harris. Gardner said telephone service in the area was disrupted. The fire was fought jointly by rural firemen and firemen from the Town of Warrenton.

Montague Campaigns Here For Court Post

Bert M. Montague, a 58-year-old Raleigh attorney, is one of the candidates for nomination to the North Carolina Court of Appeals, seeking the vacancy created by the retirement of Chief Judge Naomi Morris. He was campaigning in Warrenton Tuesday.

MONTAGUE

A native of Wake County, Montague graduated from Wake Forest College and Wake Forest Law School. After service in World War II and graduation from law school, Montague entered the private practice of law in Raleigh. Soon thereafter, he accepted a position as revisor of statutes with the attorney general's office.

In 1956, he became administrative assistant to the chief justice. While in that capacity, he also functioned as executive secretary of the Judicial Council.

With the advent of court reform and the resulting unification of the courts and centralization of management, Montague became the first assistant director of the newly-established Administrative Office of the Courts under Judge J. Frank Huskins. In 1968, he was appointed state court administrator.

being done in North Carolina. Montague is recognized as an advocate of court unification and management. He was advisor to court study projects in numerous states.

A lifelong Democrat, Montague is seeking the Democratic nomination.

Mayor White said that tomorrow's meeting should be attended by members of the water and sewage committee as well as the town and county attorney.

Hospital Applications Sought

Applications are being accepted for the next class of the Maria Parham Hospital School of Medical Technology, which will begin in September.

The two-year course trains women and men to become medical laboratory technicians, capable of performing the many laboratory tests in a hospital or clinic. The Maria Parham school is accredited by the Accrediting Bureau of Health Education Schools, a national organization. Its graduates are thereby authorized to work in their specialized field anywhere in the United States.

During the 24-month training period, students receive classroom lectures and participate in laboratory exercises in the hospital's large, modern medical laboratory. In addition, they complete about 2,500 hours of supervised on-the-job training.

Upon completion of the school, graduates take a national examination to become registered laboratory technicians. Since the school opened in 1966, it has graduated 42 laboratory technicians. Maria Parham school graduates have enjoyed a very high success rate in passing the national exam, and their scores have been uniformly high.

Residents of Vance, Granville, Franklin and Warren counties, as well as several students from other North Carolina localities and from out-of-state have trained at Maria Parham. The school's graduates are employed in hospitals, clinics and physicians' offices throughout the Southeast.

Applications for admission to the September class must be submitted to the school by April 15. Qualifications for admission include graduation from an accredited high school. A background in chemistry, physics and foreign languages is desirable, but some exceptions can be made. Applicants are screened by a board of admissions before selection for the six-member class.

Interested persons should contact a high school guidance counselor or the School of Medical Technology at Maria Parham Hospital.

Shrinking Sun

The recent scientific controversy over the sun's size challenges the centuries-old assumption that it was constant and unchanging. The debate started in 1979 when solar physicist John Eddy of the National Center for Atmospheric Research declared that the sun's 864,000-mile diameter had decreased by about 630 miles.
