Rate Increase

(Continued from page 1) increase in long distance rates, coupled with the drastic changes imposed upon the entire telephone industry through federal deregulation, and the difficult state of the economy in general."

The breakdown of the company's spending of the increase, if granted, is as follows: $4.8 million for increased Extended Area Service rates; $3.3 million for increased service connection, move and change charges; $28.5 million for increased basic local exchange rates; and $1.1 million for increased charges for supplemental services and equipment.

Williamson said that over half of the increased revenues would go to pay federal, state and local taxes.

Williams cited deregulation and competition as two factors making it "impossible to continue a pricing system that spreads our costs over everyone."

"Local service historically has been significantly underpriced," Williams said. "In the last 25 years, the cost of living in general, as measured by the Consumer Price Index, has increased more than 10 times as much as our rates for local telephone service."

The company filed the request on August 30. The Utilities Commission is expected to hold hearings early next year before ruling on the company's request.

If the requested increase is granted, the average residential customer in the system's smallest exchanges will pay $2.50 more per month for basic service; in the company's largest exchanges, the basic service increase will be $3.70 per month.

Rates differ from town to town depending on the number of telephones a customer can dial within his local dialing area.

Carolina Telephone serves some 575,000 customers in 50 of the state's 100 counties and has 5,350 employees with an annual payroll of $104 million.

PCB Landfill

"There was some flurry of activity (from Washington). We will look at the possible biological in-place treatments as material is being put into the landfill," Kenna said. "But once it (the PCB-laced soil) is in the dump, and the cap is put on, we can't do anything."

Strickland vowed that if an emergency arose in which a dumpsite is needed for additional hazard wastes, the Afton landfill will not be used.

"Let's hope we never need it (more storage space) in North Carolina," he said. From now on we're going to let private enterprise deal with private enterprise. PCB is the only thing that will ever be dumped in here."

Lens Cleaners

Sunglasses that are smudged with suntan oil can be cleaned with rubbing alcohol, ginger ale, or spray-on window cleaner.
