

AT ONE WITH EARTH

Unless a man loves the soil for its own sake he's no farmer. Just watch him during his leisure hours. Instead of sitting near the edge of his orchard, gazing in the direction of the city, cursing the capitalists, he's moving among his trees, looking 'em over, appraising them according to their promise, lopping off a cross-branch here, cutting shrubs or a coniferous tree or two. Or he can probably be found down below the pasture considering a dam so's to have a little lake of his own.

That's the way he does. He'll support a beautiful apple in his hand, without plucking it from the branch, and gaze at it for five minutes. His horses neigh at him; his cattle bawl at him; his hogs squeal at him; the birds sing for him; the breezes blow for him; his dogs and kids follow him around.

Yep, that's a farmer. And there ain't a dang thing the matter with him.

YOUNG AND OLD

From "The Waiver Babies"
By Charles Kingsley

When all the world is young, lad,
And all the trees are green;
And every goose a swan, lad,
And every lass a queen;
Then hey for boot and horse, lad,
And round the world away;
Young blood must have its course, lad,
And every dog his day.
When all the world is old, lad,
And all the trees are brown;
And all the sport is stale, lad,
And all the wheels run down;
Creep home, and take your place there,
The spent and maimed among:
God grant you find one face there
You loved when all was young.
