the Snapshot Guild

Pictures of children in a favorite play situation add interest to family albums.

Use Simple Props to Make Story-Telling Snapshots

Every one who has ever had anything to do with a "theatrical" production, whether it be a grammar school pageant or a community theater group offering, knows the importance of having the right properties. We've rummaged through trunks in attics, through boxes in basements to find just the right things to use in the setting to help tell the play's story to the audience.

Props can be similarly used in your snapshots to tell a story that will be fun to read and re-read in the pages of your family albums for many years to come. Instead of taking a picture of little Susie, who is the family's pride and joy, standing staring straight into the camera—picture her in one of her favorite play settings.

You can sometimes do this candidly, but on other occasions you'll want to set-up such a picture. This will enable you to arrange the props for the best possible composition of your snapshot scene.

The picture which illustrates today's column was chosen because it brings out this point very nicely. Whether the little girl had arranged her "pupils" in exact y this fashion, or if the camera-user had a hand in it, we can't say. In either case, they are nicely arranged so that their attention—and the attention of anyone viewing the picture is neatly centered on the little girl playing teacher.

Choose the right props, and arrange them nicely to help your family snapshots tell an interesting story. —John Van Guilder
