CITES NORTH CAROLINA AS EXAMPLE

In a speech before the Rotary Club of Greenville, S. C., recently Governor Hardwick, of Georgia, held up North Carolina as an example for the other Southern States to consider.

“North Carolina,” he said, “has adopted a just and sensible system of finance and taxation. That State not only has secured much new business, but it has made gains along all lines.

“Business men in South Carolina, his native State, Governor Hardwick stated, are alive to the situation now, and he predicted that many beneficial changes will be made in the two States in the near future.

It makes no difference where one goes now, he hears North Carolina praised on every hand by men who know what they are talking about.

THE BONUS NOT DEAD.

probability, and that if it does not the question will be definitely decided in favor of the bonus, in the election in 1924.

Comptroller Owsley declares that a canvass of Congress which will convene in December, shows a majority for the bonus. Unless the Republicans are able to change the vote of some of these Senators, the bill will get through the next Congress.

The League and the bonus have been defeated by the Republicans so far, but it is evident that they are far from dead. The Republicans thought they were smart when they defeated both measures, but they are coming back for more punishment or commendation, and they will worry the Republicans again.

J. W. Almond Home Burned.
Albany News-Herald.
Shortly after 10 o'clock on Saturday night the home of Mr. J. W. Almond, which was located on the extreme outskirts of East Albemarle, was discovered to be in a blaze, and before anything could be done the building was a total loss, together with all household and kitchen furniture, with the exception of one desk which was saved from the fire.

The city fire alarm was turned in when the blaze was discovered, but as the building was located far beyond the city boundary line, there was no water hydrant in reach, and, of course, the building was so nearly a mass of flames that the chemicals used by the city fire department were of no avail.

Mr. and Mrs. Almond were not at home at the time.

Birthday Dinners Among Surprises Greeting Passengers on Big Liners

Chief Steward HoMand of President Harding

New York, April 16.—When Miss Agnes Mahoney, a passenger aboard the President Harding of the United States Lines, bound for Bremen from New York on a recent voyage, went to the dining salon for breakfast one morning, a few days out, she was surprised to find her table a bower of flowers.

“The dinner will cost nothing,” said the Chief Steward. “This is a courtesy extended by the United States Lines to those passengers who, while aboard their vessels, celebrates a birthday, wedding or other popularly recognized anniversary.”

“As for the manner in which I learned that it was your birthday, that is a little secret, that we never divulge, but a very simple matter at that, as you may some day find out.”

Miss Mahoney had her dinner party and a dance following it, which not only delighted her, but her guests and the entire list of first cabin passengers. She did not learn, though, how the Chief Steward found out about her birthday, but she may now, if this story comes to her attention.

The Chief Steward's of all United States Lines have under their direction the entertainment, as far as the dining salons are concerned, of passengers. It is their duty, as far as they possibly can, to arrange, without request, dinners of the kind mentioned, as well as those for which a special request is made. These din-

Mothers of Famous Men

The Mother of Voltaire.
Although she died when he was only seven years old, and he has stated in his own writings that she was nothing but a shadow to him, the biographical data in the case point to the fact that Mlle. d'Amard, mother of the great French satirist and rebel, Voltaire, had important qualities of breeding and mind that were inherited by her brilliant, eccentric son.

In the first place, all gentleness of birth to which the great writer fell heir, was inherited from the maternal side of the family. His father's people were of the bourgeoisie, thick-witted and clumsy, but the d'Amard family ranked rather high in the social scale, and there are some evidences of noble blood.

Mlle. d'Amard, whose reason for marrying her husband has never been well established, was a young woman of delicacy, both physical and mental, of gentle manner but, according to many commentators, a rather piercing wit and a fine quality of perception. There is no question that Voltaire, who was the youngest of her children, inherited the delicacy of her body and health, and many people insist that his delicacy of wit was also a heritage from her.

Among her friends were many intellectuals, and many gay, witty people. Ninon de L'Enclos, the famous or rather infamous favorite of King Louis, was numbered among her acquaintances, and she was on terms of intimacy with three especially witty, gay and clever ables. There is at least a fair amount of substantiation to the claim that a goodly part of Voltaire's mental equipment came through his mother.

ners, luncheons and even late after-dance suppers, are prepared and served without any cost to the passenger whatsoever, being included in the service which the vessels of the United States Lines offer its passengers.

For these dinners special menus are always prepared showing not only the food to be served, but the list of guests and the name of the host or hostess.

The birthday celebrations are made possible as a surprise to the passenger through the medium of the ship's manifest. On this are listed the names of all passengers and their birth dates as given on their passports, and from this list the Chief Stewards find out in whose honor to arrange birth anniversary dinners.

Lines to Be Remembered.
No man ever stated his griefs as lightly as he might. For it is only the finite that has wrought and suffered; the infinite lies stretched in smiling repose.—Emerson.
