TRADE WEEK.

Concord business men have stopped at no expense to make Trade Week, which begins here Thursday, the largest event of its kind in the history of this county.

The event starts Thursday morning, May 24th, and will continue until 6 p. m., Saturday, June 2nd. These dates have been chosen so that the sale will run through two Saturdays.

Concord stores will offer an unusual line of goods for the big trade event. Heads of the business houses have ordered a large supply of goods and these will be offered at the lowest possible prices.

The event has been planned by the merchants for two reasons. First, to create more interest in Concord as a trading center, and second to create a greater impetus for Spring and Summer trading.

MAY ENTER ANOTHER FIELD.

Reports from Detroit that Henry Ford may enter the textile field will be of general interest and of special interest to the South.

It is reported that the Ford plants use annually 85,000,000 pounds of cotton fabrics, exclusive of duck, and that the Ford consumption of cotton is equal to 1.76 per cent. of the entire American crop of 1922.

Record points out, "their enormous use of cotton, wool and other fabrics would make of the Ford Motor Company one of the greatest textile producers in the country; and that the Fords have some original ideas in connection with the industry is indicated by the fact that they have turned down offers of several complete textile plants in the East which have been made to them."

his way to Mt. Pleasant, and upon asking her what she would have him to say to the young women and young men, she replied: (1) To maintain a clean, pure character. In this day of fads and fancies the youth of the land are apt to ignore this important factor in preparing for a successful life.

Dr. Gogsware took his text from 1 John 5:4, "And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." The speaker said that such phrases as "Success in business," "Forging Ahead," and "Success in life," were familiar to every American; that these have a decided influence upon the lives of our people, that to make good one must have faith in himself, but that the secret of true success was faith in God; that unless we had faith in the life-breathing, pulsating God our lives were doomed to defeat, destruction and death.

Again there were three factors which determined what a life would be: (1) Heredity. By heredity a person was endowed with certain physical properties, properties of blood and intellect. Our lives were being shaped by their influence upon the individual. It was a great thing to have a noble ancestry; it was a pleasing sight to look at a distinguished family tree, but no one was to lie down in the shade of it.

(2) Environment. By environment was meant the schools attended, the religion professed, the very air breathed. Strong men and strong women sometimes overcome bad environment, but as a rule, the life was the product of the environment in which it was reared.

(3) Human will. The human will energized by the grace of God was the greatest factor. Any man could smile when the world was smiling with him, but the test of a man was the man who could smile when the world goes dead wrong. This could be done only when the human will were energized by faith in the living God.

In closing the speaker saw in each young man and young woman a King and Queen. He saw in them the possibility of victory. He left two pictures with them. The first was of David, the famous ruddy-faced boy, the shepherd who was called in from watching his sheep to carry a kit of food and comfort to his brothers in the army. He found his brothers afraid, and he went out to fight the giant with only his sling. He brought back the head of the giant, nailed it on the wall, and wrote over it: "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." The other picture was that of Christ Himself. He was the Great Example. The spirit of the Lord was upon Him. He came to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.

Mr. Schaeffer based his remarks upon parts of several verses found in the fourteenth chapter of St. John. In the twenty-seventh verse are these words: "Peace I leave with you. My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give unto you." In the fourteenth verse are found these: "If ye shall ask anything in My name, I will do it." Also the second verse is found thus: "In My Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you."

All who are Christians possess alike the peace of Christ in their hearts.

The lives of those who know not the peace of God are empty of heart; The Christian's life is a life of peace, of power, and of place. It is a life of peace in that he is not afraid to search the heart for sin. He is not tossed to and fro by the power of Satan. He is no longer at enmity with God. Peace with God brings the power of God. It is the peace of Him who changed not, sickness, storms, pestilences, and the trials and disasters of life cannot take away that peace of God.

Then, the Christian's life is a life of power. It possesses the power of prayer. The humblest power is a power. We are promised that which we ask in His name. In prayer there is the spirit of God, and the spirit of God knowing the mind of God makes intercession with God.

Also, the Christian's life is a life of place. The Christian is meek and humble. He is a servant. Yet, we are promised that the meek shall inherit the earth, and he that humbly himself shall be exalted. The Christian's place is in the Father's house of many mansions, the place Christ prepared.

Mothers of Famous Men

The Mother of Franklin Pierce.
Does a girl of today love a new hat? Does she like the latest style in dresses—and bright colors—and does she like to have young men look at her and admire her? So did Anna Kendrick, away back in 788, up in Hillsborough, New Hampshire. "La! It's all woods and hills here!" she said. "Who is there to see all my pretty things?"

"There's the young widower, Captain Benjamin Pierce," suggested some one slyly. "Do you think I'll look at him," Anna Kendrick tossed her head. "Not I. A widower indeed." But she did look. Captain Benjamin Pierce was a fine, strong young man. He had served all the long years of the American Revolution, and now he had come up into the New Hampshire hills to be a farmer. He had been happily married, but his wife had died only a few months after he had married her—and now he was left alone in the little square log house that he had built with his own hands. He was lonely enough, there in the circle of black woods, with the frowning hills looking down upon him.

Anna Kendrick was one of those bright-eyed, lively, mischievous girls, short and well-formed, who attract attention anywhere. She had a natural taste in dress, and she wore anything well. Because she knew all this, she insisted upon the very latest that she could find in clothing, and she busied many a messenger who went down to the sea coast, insisting that he bring back something new for her. She could talk her father into buying anything for her. "Fie! fie! There's that Mistress Kendrick in all her red ribbons and finery!" said the thin old gossip on Sundays. There she was, sure enough, pretty dressed wonderful bonnet that she herself had made, and all. She looked just once at Captain Benjamin Pierce, and he proposed—as she had meant to do. They lived very happily in the log house, and there she taught Franklin Pierce, her son, how to read. How could she know that the mischievous boy would become the President of the United States? She gave him her love, as she had given him her vivacity and activity and that was enough.

How Do You Get That Way?
A young woman writes to inquire how to tell when she is in love and when it's the weather. She says she cannot always differentiate between the depression that comes from the gloom and the rain, and the tickling of the heart. The two moods are identical so far as she is able to analyze them.—Berkshire Eagle.
