COMMENCEMENT AT SCOTIA SEMINARY

Exercises Began Sunday With the Baccalaureate Sermon.

The commencement exercises of Scotia Women's College began Sunday, May 20th, with the baccalaureate sermon, which was preached by the president of the institution, Rev. T. R. Lewis, D. D., in Westminster Presbyterian Church at 4 p. m. He selected as his text Proverbs 29:18, "Where there is no vision the people perish." Dr. Lewis pointed out the need of special revelation from God to keep men in restraint. "Visions of men have brought blessings and comforts to our race. Dismissing the heavenly vision, the speaker pointed out, always brought ill results to nations as well as individuals. The Class of '24 young women were advised to see "what others did not see," for a better and more auspicious day in their time. He referred then to the value of little things, order, peace and tenacity.

A beautiful feature of the sermon was the glowing tribute the speaker paid to Rev. Luke Portland, D. D., the founder and first president of the institution. He described him as "a man of vision years ahead of his time." He saw what others did not see and "you," said the speaker, "are now enjoying the results."

Similar tributes were paid to Dr. D. J. Satterfield, of Wooster, Ohio, and the late A. W. Verper, D. D.

"The Town That Forgot God" Boasts New Theme.

For the past five years the critics and the public have been shouting from the house tops for something new in pictorial entertainment.

Virtually every picture released boasted of having a new plot, a new angle, a new star, a new author or something else out of the ordinary, but still the critics howled for "something new."

At last the leading critics throughout the United States admit that there is "something new under the sun." It is the unusual theme of "The Town That Forgot God," William Fox' latest sensational photodrama, which will open a two days' engagement at the Piedmont Theatre today. The production was directed by Harry Millarde, who staged the other William Fox supreme success "Over the Hill."
