Mrs. Lawrence, who is a member of the club, is leaving soon for her new home. After a very enjoyable morning little Louise Parks came in bearing a tray full of dainty little gifts from each member. These expressed the regret of Mrs. Lawrence's departure. Following this, delightful refreshments were served. These consisted of iced tea, sandwiches and candy.

The following guests, in addition to the regular club members, were present: Mrs. A. B. Davis, Mrs. V. I. Reavis, Mrs. J. C. Gibson and Mrs. Frank Morrison.

Just before leaving the president read the following little poem, written by Mrs. Williams:
We are glad you came a little while,
But oh, why must you leave us?
We'll miss your every sunny smile,
The parting now will grieve us,
There's nothing to you, I can say,
Except I've learned to love you,
I'm sorry that you go away,
May skies seem bright above you.

The Churches and Their Presiding Officers.
Charity and Children.
Each moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church is elected for one term only, and cannot be elected moderator at any future Assembly. In the 62 years of the history of the Southern church only four laymen have been elected to this office, though ministers and ruling elders are equally eligible. In the Northern General Assembly only one layman has occupied that exalted office. Laymen of the Methodist General Conference are barred from presiding over the body entirely. The Southern Baptist convention has been more partial to its laymen, several men of the pew having held the office of President.

NEED NOT FEAR FUTURE NEW YORK BANKER SAYS

Tells Textile Manufacturers of Danger in Inflation.
Philadelphia Record.
Where they are going to find places to park their automobiles is of more concern now to the American people than world politics or the European situation, according to George R. Roberts, vice president of the National City Bank of New York, in an address last night before the Philadelphia Textile Manufacturers' Association at its semi-annual dinner at the Manufacturers' Club. Business men need have no fear for the future prosperity of the country from present indications, he said.

"The greatest danger in periods of inflation," said Mr. Roberts, "is that business profits for reducing their indebtedness, but continue to draw on their credit to the straining point. Unfortunately, the Federal Reserve Bank was inaugurated when this country was at war and the government's own needs were the greatest. The result was that it did not function as intended when the crisis came because there was no reserve for banks to draw upon."

This situation never will occur again, as the lesson has been learned that business cannot use the bank reserve and have it when needed the most.

Vigorous opposition to the anticipated legislation in the next Congress on "truth in fabrics," or the proposed bill for compulsory wood labels, was urged by Colonel Millard D. Brown. The passage of this bill would create more dishonesty in manufactured wool products, Colonel Brown said, and simply men a few more thousand government employees as inspectors, who would not know any more about what the mills were turning out than the consumers.

Charles J. Webb, president of the association, presided, and said that if there was more attention paid to stabilization of prices and values in business wages would take care of themselves. "There is nothing to fear in high wages," said Mr. Webb. "As a matter of fact, so long as we have high wages there will be a continuation of good business. It is the wage earner after all, who spends the money, and as a business man I just love a spendthrift."

LIE SENT OUT FROM SALISBURY.
Baltimore Negro Paper Describes Racial Clash at Salisbury That Never Occurred.

Salisbury, May 25.—While white citizens of Salisbury patrolled the depot platform with guns and pistols in an effort to prevent 400 negroes from leaving this city for the industrial fields of Pennsylvania, other white men formed a mob and took a negro out and lynched him. One hundred and ninety-five of the negroes succeeded in boarding a train, while others had their tickets snatched out of their hands and torn up by white men.

All this happened last Wednesday and no one here, not even the newspaper men, found it out until today upon the arrival of copies of the Afro-American, a negro weekly paper published at Baltimore.

That paper gives the name and address of a Baltimore man who was visiting in Salisbury at the time, and said he witnessed the trouble. When the article came to the attention of Postmaster A. H. Boyden he immediately took steps to have the lie corrected, ad called in a number of influential negro citizens to have them use their influence against the reading of a paper that would publish such a tale.

FOX PICTURE CALLED SCREEN MASTERPIECE

"The Village Blacksmith," Based on Great Poem, Praised by Critics.
Could Longfellow see the William Fox picture adapted from the Cambridge poet's immortal "Village Blacksmith," he would be as pleased as a three-year-old child with a lollipop. Little could the master poet realize, when he wrote the immortal lines which have come down to this age, that the wonderful adaptation could have been made.

Paul H. Sloane, who wrote the scenario from the poem, has compiled a screen masterpiece. All through the scenes of the photoplay the sterling qualities of Longfellow's hero are preserved. The picture has been proclaimed by Broadway critics as a screen masterpiece.

One of the critics has aptly described the picture as "doing for father what 'Over the Hill' did for mother." Throughout the trials and tribulations of a lifetime the father stands out as the heroic figure in a story about a typical American family. "Tolling, rejoicing, sorrowing, onward through life he goes," sang the poet and so has Paul Sloane depicted the central figure of the story.

In every way "The Village Blacksmith" is a screen masterpiece and it is destined to be one of the greatest film attractions of a year replete with photoplay successes. It will be shown at the Piedmont Theatre beginning Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.
