A SAFE INVESTMENT.—He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again.—Prov. 19:17.

A CITY NEED.

One heard almost daily complaint here of the fact that the streets of the city bear no name plates and most of the houses no numbers. The proposal to erect the name plates at all street intersections was taken up last year by the aldermen who dropped the matter when they were told what the cost would be on a proposed sign post. We think money should not be recklessly spent, but we contend that the placing of the signs is one of the biggest needs in the city and they should be erected at once. If the city cannot afford to erect the kind of posts that were shown here last year, why not try something else?

Concord is not a village or a country town any more. Every man and woman in the city does not know the house in which every other man and woman lives. It is not easy now to keep up with one's neighbor in some parts of the city, to say nothing of strangers.

So far as we have been able to learn only a few of the streets in the city are marked. People come into The Times-Tribune office almost daily trying to find the location of some street. There is no way to find the average street here without stopping someone and asking questions. The population of Concord is changing rapidly now. New people are coming here every day, some of the old ones are leaving. It is hard for a stranger to get about when he has no sign posts on the streets to designate them.

We are frank to admit that we do not understand how a person gets about, or ever locates a desired house. After a person finds a street here now, by asking everyone he meets the direction, he would have to stop at every house and ask which house bore such and such a number. Very few of the houses are properly numbered and a majority of them have no numbers at all.

The sign posts and numbers probably will cost the city some money, but they are needed. We can't stick to our provincial habits because of a few dollars. We are growing, we are becoming more of a city each year, and it is time we designated our streets and numbered our houses in a civilized fashion.

THE PRESIDENT'S TRIP.

Plans for the trip President Harding will make to Alaska this summer have been about completed. The President will return to Washington via the Panama Canal and en route to Alaska plans to make at least 14 speeches.

The country is awaiting the trip with keen interest. The people seem to want to know just what kind of a trip Mr. Harding will make out of it. There are many who believe he will seize this opportunity to defend his administration and thus lay the foundation for his claim to the Republican nomination in 1924. Others believe he will devote his addresses to a defense of his court plan, and still others believe he will devote the trip solely to a study of Alaska and her needs and wants.

The latter may be the reason the President is going to Alaska, but there will be plenty of politics mixed in with the more serious side of the journey. Mr. Harding in all probability will be a candidate again, and he is not likely to miss this chance to boost himself and his party. And in some sections through which he will travel he will have a wide field to work in. He will pass through the stronghold of Senators Borah, LaFollette and Brookheart, and it would be a fine thing if he could carry to the people there a message of sanity, Americanism and conservatism.

Republican leaders will see to it that the opportunities of the trip are grasped ed, and while Mr. Harding will give Alaska serious consideration once he reaches it, we fully expect him to devote his time en route to a defense of his administration and a plea for another chance.

HARDING'S PAPER IS NOT FOR SALE

President Holding On to the Marion Star, Which Furnished Him a Living. Fourth Estate.

The Marion, Ohio, Star is not for sale. President Harding, its chief owner, says so.

In the days before he went to the White House, the Star, a prosperous and sizable country daily, furnished Mr. and Mrs. Harding a comfortable living and some of the luxuries of life.

"I am hanging on to it," the President confessed recently to a group of newspaper editors, "because I would rather be a newspaper publisher than anything else in the world. I like it and I hope I am going to be the chief owner of the Marion Star when they settle up my estate in a legal manner."

The President has not been active as editor of the Star for eight years. When he went to the Senate, the active editorial direction of the paper was transferred to one of his assistants, but during all of that time, and in the White House now, Mr. Harding as publisher of the Star has kept in intimate contact with its career, its earnings, its rise in circulation, its editorial achievements and its public service.

Hundreds of newspapers come to the White House daily, but of them all, the Star is the president's favorite. A copy is always on his desk and, as in the old days, he takes it "home" in the evening so his wife can read it.

When he resumes active charge of the Star, Mr. Harding says he will eliminate news pertaining to the failings of people.

"I think the most unfortunate contribution to the disturbing tendencies of today is the excessive publication of sensational news," the President told a group of editors recently. "I believe if I were to write the code, and could write it for all of the newspapers of America, I would ban everything of a vicious character except that which is necessary as a public warning. If I ran a newspaper to suit my own ideals, there would not be a police court reporter on the paper—never a police court column in the paper."

"Oh, yes," said the pilot on the river steamboat, "I have been on this river so long I know where every snag is."

Just then, with a jar, the boat struck a snag. "There! That's one of them now," he added.

More Expected of Country Than of City

If it wasn't for printing local names the small-town newspapers would have a hard time convincing its subscribers that it is superior to the city paper that circulates in its field, says the Kansas City Star. It is expected that the country paper will notice a thousand and one little things the big city publication passes up.

One busy day in the Mason Daily Chronicle-Herald office the entire writing force was kept on the jump by two political conventions, an important case in circuit court, a farmers' institute and other matters, but entirely forgot that a certain enterprising dealer had made an improvement. He called up to let the editors know.

"You fellows running a newspaper yet?"

"We're trying to," replied the man in the news room.

"Well, you failed to get that item yesterday."

"What item?"

"I repainted my delivery truck, and there wasn't a word in your old paper about it."

A woman called and demanded to know the name of the party who had turned in the story about a function of some sort in the country. Of course, it was withheld, pending the reason for the question.

"Well, I'll find out!" she snapped back.

"What was wrong with the story?"

"Everything."

"We're sorry—can't you tell us what the trouble was?"

"The person who wrote it mentioned every man who took part but my husband," she shrieked, "and left his name out for spite."

Miss Marion Lindsay, an American woman, has been decorated by the Pope with the Gold Cross of the Order of the Good Shepherd, in recognition of her work in caring for impoverished nun in Austria since the war. The decoration is one of the highest honors conferred by the Catholic Church.

Mothers of Famous Men

The Mother of Marquess of Pombal. Theresa Mello, who married Manoel de Carvalho, was one of those mothers who find themselves known as "the mother of a bad boy." She lived in Portugal over two hundred years ago. She had been well brought up, in the semi-seclusion of a Portuguese home of the upper class. She had only a moderate education, but she had been trained to lead a good and devout life. The man whom she married was a person like herself. How surprising, then, that the son of this good and sensible couple, Sebastian, should grow up a wild and headstrong youth, who cared nothing for his own reputation, nothing for the reputation of his parents, and nothing for law and order.

Over him the mother had prayed; for him she had hoped. He rewarded all this by leading the sort of life that Shakespeare shows Prince Hal leading—he associated with rascals, ran the streets, took part in evil deeds. Kindly influences held out helpful hands, and this rascal of a son was changed into an author, and finally into one of the leading statesmen of Portugal. Like that same Prince Hal in Shakespeare's "Henry V," Sebastian changed his courses, and made over all of Portugal, doing good on all sides, and leading a noble life. No touch of mother love is wasted; even the vilest man in the world remembers it with respect—and it may save him, or turn him into good courses.

New Circular on Boll Weevil.

Raleigh, June 6.—Bringing its recommendations right up to the present and including letters from farmers about their experiences with the boll weevil as well as the results of last year's work in dusting cotton with calcium arsenate, the agricultural extension service of the State College and State Department of Agriculture has just released extension circular 137 by Franklin Sherman. This circular, comprising 22 pages of practical and scientific information written in everyday language and easily understood. It gives the advantages and disadvantages of dusting, explains the method and describes the machinery to use.

In presenting this circular to the farmers of North Carolina, the extension service believes that it has fully covered most of those points that should receive attention in the control of the weevil. The circular is written from the viewpoint of the insect alone and does not combine the recommendations about livestock and other crops. Neither does it take in cultural methods, fertilization and other factors involved in producing a good crop of cotton. It only covers the "protection" of such cotton as is produced.

The circular has now been received from the printer in an edition of 15,000 and will be sent to farmers on request as long as the supply lasts. County agents will also be supplied with copies and those who do not care to write to the Editor, Extension Service, Raleigh, for a copy may obtain one from their county agent. Requests should be made as early as possible so that all preparations for fighting the weevil may be made on time.

What Do You Get When You Buy Furniture?

Just so many pieces of assembled lumber cut to same design, intended for fast selling without due regard for the home furnisher? Or Furniture that has been carefully assembled, painstakingly finished and upholstered as only "Good Furniture" can, with a certain degree of care and efficiency.

It is a known fact that to the average home furnisher, the worth of any piece of furniture is determined from examination of outside appearance. But from this alone the story is not to be gleaned. Interior construction and workmanship should importantly be considered. This is what decides the life of furniture. In this store, you deal with those who understand all points of making in furniture and who are well able to suggest worthwhile furniture for your home.
