MERCY ASSURED:—He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.—Proverbs 28:13.

WHY MURDER HAS DECREASED.

The Calhoun Times notes that murders have become fewer in South Carolina during the past year, stating, "we do not see and hear, and read about as many murders in South Carolina now, as formerly," and offering an explanation that gets right at the heart of the trouble. "It is easily explained, Juries have been convicting, the courts have not been impeding justice, and governors have been allowing the electric chair to perform on white people. The average murderer is a great coward after all, and has no hankering for that old mosaic law which demands an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. It is marvelous how people can control passion when they think the law means something."

The murder situation in South Carolina became very acute at one time, but when the courts began to function more swiftly and more certainly, passions became more controlled. It is all right to talk about not taking the life of a human being in an electric chair or by hanging, but we wonder if life sentences would have the same effect and if murders would have decreased under such a law as they have under present laws. When a man knows that he is almost certain to have his life taken if he takes another life, he is a little more reluctant when his finger touches the trigger.

And what has been done in South Carolina to stop murders can be done in that and other States to stop other law violation. While we do not mean that death sentences should be imposed on the violators of other laws, we mean that speedy and certain action by the courts will have more effect than anything else in bringing people to their senses and creating within them respect and fear for the laws. Jail sentences for bootleggers and speeders will have a fine influence in checking two present day evils. If every auto driver knows that his car will be taken from him for 12 months when he is caught doing reckless driving, he will be more careful than if he knows it will cost him $10. Speedy and certain justice are the two things that will curb lawlessness quicker than anything else.

SHOULD TRY TO LAND ORPHAN-AGE.

The members of the Junior Order are going to build a big orphanage somewhere in North Carolina. In this State the organization is very strong, and the orphanage is to be located in the State for that reason. The site for the plant has not been decided yet.

Concord and Cabarrus county have strong Junior Order lodges. Members of the organization in this county have always taken a keen interest in their work and the general work of the order, and we hope they will make some effort to get the orphanage for this county. There are many ideal sites for the school in Cabarrus county. Our water supply is excellent, our railroad facilities are usually fine. It would be no mistake to locate the orphanage here, and we want to see the Juniors here make an effort to get it.

Members of the North Carolina legislature were given another scare this week when it became known that an error by a clerk or someone in the last Assembly had provided a bill giving the State prison to the State of Georgia. If the money could not be found to support in some other way, it would mean that persons would have to father in Raleigh either this month or August, and such prospects are not very inviting. Raleigh is not the coolest place in the world in the summer.

Mothers of Famous Men

Gesine Judith Hagerup, the Mother of Grieg.

"Mother, I want to sit and listen!" "That is exactly what I wish you to do, little one," smiled the mother. "I want you to love music as I love it. Maybe some day you too will play and sing! How that would please me!"

How happy that Norwegian mother would have been if she could have looked ahead only a few years and seen her son, Eduard Grieg, honored as one of the greatest composers of music in the whole world! She herself was a distinguished musician, known beyond her own land. Every week when she was at home, she brought together in her house a company of people who loved music. There they sang and played hour after hour. The little boy pleaded to stay and listen. The very request pleased the mother. Curled up in his chair, quiet, unnoticed, he drank in the music with an appreciation that was beyond that of most children.

His father, Alexander Grieg, was partly of Scotch descent, and cared less for music than did the mother. The woman whom Alexander Grieg had married, Gesine Judith Hagerup, was all Norwegian, and all music. Far back in her family, in 1607, there had been a great genius, of whose memory she was proud. Her own father had been a man of importance. She had felt the stirring of ambition and had risen high in music. She tried her hand at writing plays. Nevertheless, marriage set her at housework, and so she looked to her little son to carry on the ambition that she herself felt. She taught him how to play. She corrected his work. She improved his taste—and at last, out of that ambitious teaching, there came the masterful compositions of the great Eduard Grieg. Motherhood may fulfil its ambitions doubly!
