ORCHARD ROBBING A CRIME

THE CONCORD DAILY TRIBUNE

ORCHARD ROBBING A CRIME Auto Parties Scal and Destroy Products of Farmers. A pensylvania farm woman who has just cause for complaint tells her side of the story in the July issue of The Farm Journal. "City folks have no idea of the cost of production of a farmer's crops. I have a feeling they never will until farmers inve poster campaigns, stating their methods and costs of production. "As it is now, many city people seem for feel that God grows it and the farmer simply goes and pleks it. That idea is also in the pleasure riders in autos (perfectly respectable people), who wouldn't steal a spool of cotton for any-thing, yet steal farmers' vegetables, fruit and even take hags of clover. They don't seem to think they are steal-ing and resent it when you say they are."

Ing and resent it when you say usy are." I.Let the Discussion Go On. New York World. Senator Brookhart, of Iowa, is again lemanding an extra session of Congress o save agricultare from an "impending calamity" by way of creating a govern-nent marketing agency. Senator Con-sens, of Michigan, sees a way out through government regulation of the variants. Editor William Allen White, of Kansas, says that the basic transportation, as it has been for forty "ares." Finally comes ex-Secretary f Agriculture E. T. Meredith in one lay's run of news on this-particular subject with the finding that the situa-tion is not as bad as represented—is bad sheft for the famer who grows ouly wheat. Many voices, almost as many ding-moses of the case and just as many remedies. Still there is hope for the patient. We notice that even Sena-tion regord to the more desperate reme-warketing agency is now presented as and a marketing among the farmers them-aelves. This would be getting somewhere. By and marketing among the farmers them-elves. This would be getting somewhere. By all means, therefore, let the discussion to on freely and openly. It is bound to become less discursive under such outditions and more concentrated on a few specific propositions and their cold examination in reason calightened by an uncovering of all the facts. Most of the remedial legislation so far suggested is absurd and much of the remainder would be without any substantial effi-racy. The contribution of even so level-headed a business man as Senator Couzens belongs to the latter class. The country, and most of all the farmer, cannot afford to be stampeded into cure-il legislative action for agriculture more than for any other industrial liks.
