I've received another letter from a girl whose name is Sue. She's upset and undecided as to what she ought to do, for her fiance is saving every penny that he can, so's to build a house and own it, which is spiendid of a man, but he will not think of marriage 'til his house is under way, 'til he khows he has the money in his bank that he cân pay. From his present rate of earning she must wait through weary years, it's a thought that's far from pleasing, it's the cause of all her tears, must wait through weary years, it's at thought that's far from pleasing, it's the cause of all her tears.

So she writes in desperation and she asks what she shall do, then she signs herself a weary lonely, broken-hearted Sue. And my answer is get busy, make that stubborn man see light, for a house can be demolished or be burnt up overnight. There are houses by the millions, but the homes are mighty few. There's a thought that's worth some thinking, pass it ca, unhappy Sue.

What's a house but wood and plaster with some walls of stone or brick? What's a house to married couples when their minds and hearts are sick? What's a house to either party if the other one should die? What's the use of sitting waiting for a distant by and by?

You can build a home en nothing, all it needs is love that's true, with ambitin, grit and courage. Make him see it, little Sue.

it, little Sue.
Cordially yours—T. V. R.
