WHAT'S SMART IN MEN'S WEAR

Button your double-breasted suit when you hang it up to keep the correct lines

OF COURSE there have been double-breasted suits for many years. A few men who like clothes, have always had a double-breasted in their wardrobes which they wore occasionally when they wanted a change. This season, however, thousands of men are wearing the double-breasted and it bids fair to be even more popular in the spring, although it heretofore has usually been considered a fall style.

There's nothing smarter than a well kept, well pressed, double-breasted suit—and nothing sloppier than one that's allowed to sag and wrinkle.

Lots of them do sag because the wearers don't know how to keep them in shape. According to Hart Schaffner & Marx experts, the most effective way to keep a double-breasted coat in shape is to button it over the hanger each night—not only the outside buttons, but the inside or "anchor" button as well.

This doesn't mean that the suit, like all suits, won't need cleaning and pressing at proper intervals. But, in between the trips to the cleaners, buttoning the coat when it is hung up will help materially in keeping it looking smart and trim.

Cheap Rent, This!

How would you like to rent ten acres of land for a quarter of a cent a year? That's what one family in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, is said to have done for the past 250 years. Tradition has it that back in 1675 one Count Rantzau, while hunting on horseback on his large estate, rode into a swamp. As his horse began to sink into the mud under him the county shouted for help. The horse had entirely disappeared and the count had started to follow when a farmer living nearby who heard the shout managed at the peril of his own life to rescue the count.

When the farmer spurned a cash reward and the count insisted that he be allowed to express his gratitude in a material way it was agreed that the farmer could have the marsh from which the count was rescued for an annual rental of one silver pfennig. And so the property has stayed in the hands of the farmer's descendants through all these years. Now celery and cauliflower are being grown on it.

Are You a Stamp Collector?

Many years ago the grandfather of the husband of a woman living in London was a stamp collector. One particular bunch of stamps was worth about $150. This gentleman hid them in an old bureau and didn't tell anybody about it. The man died and the bureau stayed in the family for more than two generations without any one knowing of the existence of the stamps which meanwhile were steadily increasing in value. Recently search was made for a lost jewel case and the collection of stamps was accidentally run upon. The stamps which are now worth about $75,000 were recently disposed of to stamp collectors who came from many parts of Europe to attend the sale.

No (emphatically); we do not buy old stamps; nor do we know where you can sell them. If you have any, put them away in an old bureau drawer and let your grandchildren sell them for a fortune (if they can).

To Celebrate Find.

For the past 25 years Capt. Bill Lofton has been searching for pirate gold on the shore of Angel Fish Creek on Key Largo, Fla. He has just dug up $250,000 worth of doubloons and pieces of eight. Now he is planning what has been termed a "grand bust." "The first thing I'm going to do," said the ancient mariner, "is to buy me a private Pullman car and go to New York. I ain't ever been out of the keys and I've spent 25 years diggin' for this money and now that I've found it, I ain't goin' to put it in a bank. I ain't had much time to look around. I'm goin' to spend this gold just like the pirate who buried it would have spent it if he had had the chance. I'm goin' to hire me a whole theater in New York and have all the girls play in it for me. Then I'm goin' to hire me a little hotel in New York and have 50 different people waiting on me. And I'm goin' to take along one of those help jazz bands on my private Pullman and have them play whenever I want them too."
