BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY: A VERY NEEDFUL PRAYER. Show me thy ways, O Lord; teach me thy paths. Let integrity and uprightness preserve me; for I wait on thee.—Psalm 25:4, 21.

STARTING IN THE RIGHT WAY: Representatives of seven civic, business and religious organizations were present at a conference here several days ago at which plans for a board or organized charities were discussed.

It seems to us that those present at the conference took a wise step when they appointed a committee to visit other cities for the purpose of securing ideas as to how such a board should be organized, supported and operated.

While we realize the necessity for an organized charity board in Concord, we also realize the importance and necessity of making that board function properly. For that reason we commend the promoters who have decided to learn by the experiences of others.

In some circles we have heard criticism directed against the persons who want an organized board of charity in Concord, the chief complaint apparently coming from those persons who feel that such a movement is a slur on those individuals and organizations which have conducted similar work in Concord in the past and at present.

IS THERE REAL ECONOMY? President Coolidge has just spoken to government employees again, urging them to be economical. He urged them to be careful for the future, and warned them that expenses cannot become much lower unless they are careful in the conduct of their departments.

Figures recently made public by the Savings Bank Journal and reprinted in The Bulletin Associate Industries, shows that national savings for 1925 again indicate a considerable growth in the thrift of the Nation.

SYNOPSIS: Prince Michael Yeredoff, wealthy Russian philanthropist of Paris, sick of his useless mode of life, becomes interested in Colette, an unworldly girl. His innocent young brother, Paul, is wamped by Dolores, one of Michael's cast-offs, who uses him as a tool for revenge.

CHAPTER IV—Continued. "Well, don't worry about that, for I've certainly got one bad enough for two heads. See, what a friend I am—even to the extent of assuming your headache! By the way, did you find out by what mysterious channels your little Columbine escaped? I would like to see her again. Such a figure, and such a dancer! She could win my heart very easily!"

"The Yeredoff emerald!" "Yes, I discovered the loss when I took my watch out as I was retiring."

"Do you think that one of the band of street revellers took a liking to it and relieved you of it, then?" "I don't know—but circumstantial evidence might very easily prove a case against Colette!"

"Remain just a moment longer, please," Michael said. "Not believe that the little girl took me!"

"Upon what do you base that poor trustfulness?" "Solely upon my reputation as a canny judge of human nature. I would be the most surprised man in the world if Colette turned out to be a thief!"

"Well, my friend, I hope you are right—but" and Armand chuckled typically.

"Four hours later Michael returned alone, hot and tired. The ride, the irritating talk with critical Armand, had served to put him in no better humor, and his grouch was intensified when Sergius informed him that Paul had moved, bag and baggage, to the Hotel Touraine in his absence."

"Do my ears deceive me? Why, only a few hours ago the very thought of seeing me made you flutter in distant. But now you invite it. La, la, what is the world coming to?"

"You may well be surprised, I guess," Michael answered, trying to keep himself under control, "but, nevertheless, the fact remains that I am anxious to see you. Will you be at home this evening?"

"Now let me think! Well, I have just come back from a delightful luncheon—oh, he is wonderful!—and I am rather tired, and besides," she added, with a tinkling laugh, "the same gentleman insists that I see him again tonight. What shall I do with all these invitations? Never before have I been so popular!"

"I would insist strongly that you see me!" Michael said, dogged in his attempt to reassert his old domination over this now tormenting woman.

"Is that a threat, Michael?" she laughed, easily. "No, my dear lady, surely not! All I would say is that I beg you to allow me the honor of visiting you, for I have something interesting to say to you!"
