THE ROAD TO WANT.—He that oppresseth the poor to increase his riches, and he that giveth to the rich, shall surely come to want.—Prov. 22:16.

ARE WE TO TAKE TURN ABOUT? While plans are going ahead for the disarmament conference to be held under the direction of the Council of the League of Nations we learn that nations of the world are building bigger battleships than ever before.

While plans are going ahead for the disarmament conference to be held under the direction of the Council of the League of Nations we learn that nations of the world are building bigger battleships than ever before.

What will the rest of the nations of the world do? If they follow the time-worn custom they will immediately begin work on a ship bigger than the Nelson.

This is the sort of thing the world is trying to stop, or at least its sort of thing we should be trying to stop. If Great Britain gets a navy that is more powerful than the navies of the other nations fear is aroused.

We have tried the system for ages, why not start on something else? The arms policy has failed. It has never stopped war and never will. It costs the people millions of dollars annually and eventually leads to nothing but war.

MUST TAKE THEIR MEDICINE. It was no easy thing, we can easily believe, for Governor McLean to refuse to parole or pardon the Asheville mob-members.

In this case, perhaps, more pressure had been brought to bear than in any other of the cases facing the Governor. All sorts of petitions were presented; all kinds of people made all kinds of pleas.

We feel that the majority of the people will agree with and applaud the Governor's decision. They may be mitigating circumstances, but just the same these men committed a serious crime and if we are to prevent such crimes in the future we must show a determination to let the sentences stand.

Prisoners in jails are due protection and they will get that protection only when the public knows the law will give it to them. If these men were turned loose it might encourage people in some other section to take the law into their own hands.

It is the certainty of the law rather than the severity of the law that really counts, we admit, but these mob members have not been given severe sentences. We might as well tear our courthouses down if we are to free everyone who can offer petitions and pleas.

AMERICA'S LARGEST CITIES.

The Census Bureau's tabulations on population of American cities, made as of July 1, show that Chicago is within barking distance of the 3,000,000-mark, which it had set for itself this year.

Other large city populations are: Philadelphia 1,979,364; Detroit, 1,242,044; Cleveland, 963,485; St. Louis 821,543; Baltimore, 796,296; San Francisco 557,530; Buffalo, 538,061; Milwaukee, 509,192; Washington, 497,908; Minneapolis 425,435; New Orleans 414,493; Cincinnati, 409,333; Kansas City 367,431; Indianapolis 358,819; No figures were given for New York, Los Angeles and Seattle.

Professor in Biology: "Where do bugs go in winter?" Absent Minded Student: "Search me."

A Bright Idea. There's been a new association formed to combat the crime wave and we suppose the first thing they'll do will be to pass a law making it unlawful to commit crimes.

Herald—Did Reggie beat the train to the crossing? Gerald—Yes, but the train hit him before he could get off again.

Brown—What makes your neighbor so unpopular? Jones—He's fixed his lawnmower so that when we borrow it we have to put a nickel in the slot.

The Human Dud. While he was making his way about his plantation one dark night, a sergeant heard the roar of a "G. I. Can" overboard and dived into a shell-hole. It was already occupied by a private, who was hit full in the wind by the noncom's head. A moment's silence—a long, deep breath, and then— "Is that you, sarge?" "That's me."

"Hot dog! I was just waiting for you to explode."

The log cabin was Abraham Lincoln's birthplace; the building at Washington is the Lincoln Memorial, most beautiful of all the capital's monuments.

Considering first the one building and then the other, one wonders if people, centuries hence, will not almost think that Abraham Lincoln was a myth.

MISS VIRGINIA SHOOK WANTED AT SPARTANBURG. Girl Under Arrest in Virginia to Be Taken Back to South Carolina For Trial.

Spartanburg, S. C., Feb. 11.—Virginia Shook, a pretty Gastonia, N. C. girl who was arrested in this city two months ago with fifteen gallons of whiskey in her car and who is alleged to have jumped bond in the sum of $500 a month ago, has been apprehended at Richmond, Va.

According to Magistrate M. B. Brisie the girl declared that she was a innocent victim of circumstances, maintaining that the liquor belonged to Ray Tipton of Asheville, N. C. with whom she was riding at the time Tipton was arrested at Asheville several days ago. Tipton refused to come to South Carolina without extradition papers and the matter was turned over to United States Commissioner David D. Sanders, who had Tipton transferred to Greenville, where he is now awaiting trial.

Miss Shook will be brought back to Spartanburg as soon as arrangements can be made.

Forbes Wants Case Reviewed. Washington, Feb. 11.—(AP)—Chas. R. Forbes, former director of the veterans bureau, asked the Supreme Court today to review his conviction on a charge of conspiracy.

Lespedeza Germination. It is a common belief and information that the seed of some annuals will not germinate after they are one year old and the general information put out places Lespedeza in this class. However we are finding it different for in a germination test just completed with 1923 crop seed, a sample of which have been kept in the office, germinated 64 per cent, which is exceptionally good and should substantiate the claim by the farmers that it will come back on the land after not being allowed to make seed for several years.

Infant! Boy! Fool! she sneered contemptuously.

to make Paul come to his senses? It would be best to play safe therefore.

"Of course," she mused, half to herself, "while we are only engaged, Michael will work against Paul and his friends will talk—"

Paul interrupted indignantly, exactly according to Dolores' school tale.

"Don't let that bother you, dear! As long as we love one another no outside influence is going to separate us. Anyhow, the roses can be silenced very easily—"

"How?" "By an immediate marriage!"

"Rash, impetuous boy! You're quite a breath taker!" "A week is so long," he said plaintively.

"I'm beginning to think so, too," she whispered, brushing her lips across his forehead and trembling as though in shy desire that could not long be denied, "and possibly with the proper coaxing—"

"Then we'll get married tomorrow!" he cried in rare excitement. She said that she wanted coaxing and she compelled a full measure of it as a musing baby insists upon playing with her mother.

A long hour afterward she brought herself a booklet describing the place—the most expensive and exclusive, of course!—in Switzerland which she thought would make an ideal honeymoon spot.

"It is so splendidly isolated," she explained, "that we can be all alone—just you and I!" "Always a lively gang there," she justified silently to herself. "English noblemen—American millionaires!"

Before leaving the room to get the booklet, she set a vase on her writing desk, the red roses that Paul had brought to her. They had a languishing look upon the boy as she gazed at them.

While he awaited Dolores' reply, Paul looked at the roses contemptuously.

"Satan in Sables" with Lowell Sherman in a picturization of this novel ly in the glorious tumult of love's first illusions. The roses caught his eye and a sudden whim struck him—Dolores must wear one in her hair. Lending over, he selected the prettiest one. But in withdrawing it from the vase, he spilled some water on the desk. Muttering an imprecation at him self for being so careless, he started to dry it up with a blotter, hurriedly at first, hoping to finish before she took up the blotter.

But his movements became slower and slower, and his feet took on a deathly pallor. For his eyes had unconsciously started to read an uncompleted letter which Dolores had evidently been writing just before he came in, and which had now been uncovered when he took up the blotter.

"The days pass slowly until I can see you again, my absent husband. I am at present engrossed in a game the irony of which you would enjoy, but I cannot tell to me and my only object is to deliver Prince Michael Yervodoff a blow that he will remember for a long time. In a few months, after that is done, I shall return to you at last, rich, and we'll never part again. You are the only one I ever loved—"

Every word that he read stabbed Paul to the heart, dried the sap in his bones, withered his strength. So he was only part of a game. He read the letter again and again.

And then Dolores came in. "Here it is, Paul," she cried gayly "and now you can see the place where we will be so happy and free—"

Her words shrilled at her lips suddenly, as if before the blast of a cold wind, when she saw the ghastly expression of his face. In another instant she noticed the letter in his hand.

"So I am part of a game?" He was shaking, like one fatally ill, his voice was high and unnatural. "You have been lying to me all the time, lying when you said that you loved me, lying when you put your arms around me! He paused, and it did not appear that he could find strength to continue standing to continue talking. But somehow he did. "Michael was right after all. Great God, what a fool I've been! What a poor, blind fool. St Michael was right!" he kept on repeating in a mechanical and hysterical way as he pressed his hands over his eyes.

Dolores was too wise not to know that this was the end—that she had lost—that they both had lost! "Probably so, my good friend," and her voice was harsh her eyes narrowed. "Although I am not aware of all that he said to you, still, my imagination is quite vivid at times."

Paul felt wretchedly weak and futile. "Who is this man you were writing to?" He braided the letter. "Who is he? I demand that you tell me." Anger—dangerous, red anger—was flashing in Paul now.

Dolores proudly cursed her thoughtlessness for having left that letter on the desk. She was exposed and might as well admit it, but, at least, she was going to give Paul some words to carry back to his brother.

"That man?" she answered very slowly. "It is really of no importance to me, Monsieur Paul, except to say that all during the time your brother was trying to kill a dog, he struck to me and would have killed Michael if he had ever known the truth!"

"The truth?" Paul broke in, his voice hollow. "What do you mean by the truth?"

Dolores swayed close to him brazenly. "Infant! Boy! Fool!" she sneered contemptuously. "In Paris love between healthy and normal grownups means something more than just holding hands! I was Michael's mistress for many months!"

"You lie, you damnable devil!" screamed the boy, clawing for her throat.

Dolores, coolly unconscious of her own power over the distracted mental and spiritual wreck of one who but a few short minutes ago had been a gay, light hearted boy, caught his hands and pushed him back.

"You think I lie? Then ask Michael!"

She calmly rang for a servant and signaled for Paul's stick and hat.

A moment later Paul was groping for the door, senselessly, like one bereft of the inner light of reason. He turned just before going out and looked back at Dolores, who had placidly ensconced herself upon the couch again with a magazine and the box of bon bons Dolores had brought.

"What you said is true—I'm going to kill Michael!"

"A commendable and interesting resolution!" she applauded curtly—but Paul had gone.

The license burned out. The ink marks were turned up. And the High Priestess became a yawning and mildly disgruntled woman idly turning the pages of a magazine, searching for a worthwhile story to relieve her boredom.

Persistent coughs and colds lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for persistent coughs and colds and other forms of throat troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of persistent coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, bronchitis and other forms of respiratory diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist, Creomulsion Company, Atlanta, Ga. (ad.)
