weekly Cotton Review.

New York, March 5.—The selling movement which developed in the cotton market toward the end of last month grew more active and aggressive, with prices declining to 18.27 for May, and 17.15 for October contracts during the middle of the week just ended. These prices represented declines of about 1.17 to 1.48 points from the high levels reached on the advance of February 20, and there were moderate rallies later on covering. The feeling appeared to be that the technical position of the market had been improved by the liquidation and selling of the past fortnight, and that the mid-week decline below 18 cents for December contracts had brought in considerable trade or investment buying of the new crop positions. Demand failed to broaden on the rallies which followed however, and bearish sentiment was still considerably in evidence at the end of the week as if ending encouragement in reiterated reports of favorable prospects for the new crop positions. Demand failed a report from Washington that the department of agriculture estimated the world's consumption at 23,240,000 bales, pointing to a world's carry-over at the end of the season of 10,364,000 bales, compared with 8,114,000 at the end of the season of 10,364,000 bales, compared with 8,114,000 at the end of the previous seasons. Rumors were circulated that some cotton previously intended for shipment here for delivery this month had been covered.

Bridge a Landlord.

Brooklyn bridge, New York, is a landlord and a shrewd one. Through its management it recently announced that it will increase its rents 25 per cent as the present bases expire. As a business building the bridge has been more or less a novelty for the 40 years of its existence. It is the oldest of the four East ever spans in the public mind is commonly regarded as a great transportation institution. Yet, it is a roof to a considerable business population. It shelters 51 business houses, 44 on the Manhattan side and 7 on the Brooklyn side. Six of the firms are said to have been tenants for more than 25 years. Collectively, the 51 houses contribute an annual rent roll of nearly $75,000. The bridge is also a good money-maker in other directions. Its surface and elevated cars produce a gross income of almost $140,000 annually. The seven candy and soft drink establishments pay about $80,000 a year for concessions. Other sources of income bridge up to over $300,000 a year.

The best sympathy

T is only human for a fu-meral director to feel sym-pathetic in the presence of bereaved parrons. But it is real sympathy when he recog-nizes an obligation to see to it that the highest character of burial equipment is turnished at honest prices. Such a policy has been responsible for the success of this concern.
