Apropos the French Debt. The United States is now trying to collect money which she loaned to France to carry on a war against Germany. One hundred and forty-two years ago the situation was much different. France was then trying to collect money which she loaned the United States. In May, 1784, Vergennes, the premier of France wrote, as follows to Luzerne, the French minister to America: "The carelessness with which congress treats the debts which it has contracted to the king is inconceivable, and I do not conceal from you that his majesty has testified his discontent. We do not press the Americans for reimbursement of the objects that we have furnished out of our funds, but it is important for us that they should regularly attend to the sum that we have borrowed on their account in Holland, by furnishing with exactness the interest as well as the successive instalments of the capital as they become due. I may say, your sire, to speak of it seriously to Mr. Morris, inviting him to procure for you a satisfactory answer."

of one of his creatures—therefore it is an honor to man. The favor asked is for only a slight service, "I trust out a little." The request could have been passed on to someone else; evasion of duty has become a fine art.

The request came to men who were otherwise occupied, washing and mending their nets, interfering therefore with their necessary work or business.

The request from God, was aimed at the promotion of His kingdom. It was made in order to secure a pulpit for the preaching of the Master.

This favor that Jesus asked paved the way for self knowledge. Later at the site of the remarkable draft of fishes, Simon realized the presence of Deity and fell down at Jesus feet, saying "I am a sinful man, O Lord."

Jesus' reassuring reply was, "Fear not," thus revealing His sympathy and understanding. These two ideas, knowledge of self and knowledge of God, are at the foundation of a larger service.

The practical application of the sermon is that the secret of efficient service is to keep close to Jesus at any cost, and to be alert to know His mind and do His will.

JEALOUS WIFE USES A RAZOR TO SLAY HUSBAND

Laughs About Crime Behind Bars of Cell—Head Cut Almost Off.

Death ended a family brawl near here last night and a pretty girl, 20, locked in the Mecklenburg county jail, talks freely and laughs a little bit about cutting her husband's head almost off with a razor.

Alton C. Freeman, 22, the husband, will likely be buried sometime today or Monday while his wife, Nellie, of bobbed hair and flashing brown eyes, languishes in her cell. Last night she discussed the homicide frankly and without tears.

The slaying was committed at the home of the pair, located near the Tuckasee road on the site of Camp Greene, early last night.

The woman remained after severing her husband's head and was arrested by rural police while crouching near his feet.

Soon after being lodged in her cell Mrs. Freeman talked glibly of the killing to reporters.

"Women and liquor!" answered the petite slayer, when asked why she and her husband had engaged in a dispute that ended when she slew him.

She said that they were married five months ago and for three months their wedded life was in bliss.

"But for the last two months," she added, "Alton" neglected me and has been running around with other girls."

The fatal dispute really began on Independence Square yesterday afternoon, she said, when he told her of a plan for stealing some liquor.

When she protested, he was described as going into a rage.

Reaching home, the dispute was renewed when Freeman was accented with saying that he would leave home.

When he had packed his grip and in the act of carrying out his trunk, Mrs. Freeman said that she spoke affectionately to him but was answered by a hiss and "I hate you."

"I thought I would just teach him a lesson," she said, "and having a razor in my pocket, I slipped it into my hand, threw my arms around his neck and cut him."

"No! I didn't intend to kill him," she replied when asked if the slaying was premeditated. "I just meant to teach him a lesson."

The blood gushed from his throat all over her clothing before she could retreat. He then turned, she said, walked into the kitchen of their home and fell in his mother's arms. She contended that she did not know that Freeman was dead until the policemen arrived, adding that members of her husband's family, who reside in the same house, did not inform her of the gravity of the wound.

Rural Policeman R. W. Goforth, who was accompanied to the scene of the slaying by Fred M. McGraw, discounted the girl's version that she was ignorant of Freeman's death until his arrival.

He also refuted her story of the "slain" man walking from the front of the house to the kitchen before dropping dead. He was of the opinion that the body was removed there after death.

Describing the condition of the body, the officer said that the head appeared to be completely severed except for a small portion of skin and flesh in the back of the neck.

The jagged end of the jugular vein was described as protruding from the wound. Death must have been instantaneous, he said.

The policeman allowed the girl to change her blood-clotted dress for another and then brought here to the county jail where she was lodged to await the coroner's inquest.

Delightful Reader-Entertainer Coming.

"The Girl From the West," they call Jane Goode, popular reader-entertainer, who will appear here at the coming Redpath Chautauqua, and in her sobriquet is found very definitely the certain something that differentiates Miss Goode from other readers. There is a freedom and vigor about her work, a broadness to her vision and a fresh, wholesome spirit and zest to her personality that conjure up the great American West from which she comes.

She has a keen understanding of what people really enjoy, has Jane

Goode, and her programs are designed, first of all, to please her audiences. Humorous and serious readings and impersonations ranging from Riley to Shakespeare are included in her repertoire. Delightful bits of pure comedy sparkle among emotional and dramatic numbers. A distinctly original feature of her work consists of the explanation, in artistic pose, of classic stories.

All Miss Goode's selections are interpreted with a sincerity and ability that have made her a favorite wherever she has appeared.

Another Queen. "What do you know about the age of Elizabeth?" asked the teacher, taking the history class unaware.

"She'll be 19 next month," answered the boy. Then the class roared.
