

Why the Difference.
 A Winston-Salem mother who has a son in college haled us the other day and seemed very much distressed over the fact that the daily press of the city had given such scant notice to a debate in the college where her son is a sophomore, and which forensic battle, with training debaters from across the sea, the team of which her son was one of the debaters, and another debater who was a product also of the city high school, won the decision. One of the papers here gave a very small notice of the winning of the debate. The two Winston-Salem boys and the other two did not mention it at all, yet reams on top of reams and columns after column is written about the football team, the basketball team and the basketball team and when a member of the city school distinguishes himself in athletics his picture is published and he is all but a glorified saint. Yet when two of the boys from the same school win a notable debate it is not mentioned. It seems from the run of things that heaven and muscle has taken the place of brains in the schools of our country.

Pottery portraits of women have become very popular in London.

A Strange Divorce Case.
 (By International News Service)
 New Orleans, La., Nov. 12.—Many strange divorce cases have been before Judge Cage in civil district court here but the case of Caroline E. Manning vs. Wallace Messins was the strangest.

The young wife testified that she met her husband at a picnic on August 8, 1918, fell in love at first sight, married him that afternoon and left forever before nightfall, realizing that her love for him was gone.
 For seven years they have lived apart and she asked a divorce on the seven-year law. It was granted.
