Blue Grass Country

DOWN in Old Kentucky is the blue grass pastures. And in the pastures anyone with half an eye can picture the sleek, well-fed thoroughbred horse grazing there. This thoroughbred is almost a national figure. We boast of him. Yet, were the region arid, the breeding of the horse would not save his sleekness or strength. So it is in the pastures of investment. The fare of the electric light and power industry must be wholesome, else it cannot have a healthy growth and work for you satisfactorily. No starved horse ever pulled a heavy load. The whole theory of these electric light and power companies has been to give efficient service to the public. Under state regulation, when charges to the public are under consideration, recognition is given to actual operating cost, with a fair return to investors. In other words, capital is paid only fixed wages in this industry. Since the industry must buy money as well as material if the growing needs of the country are to be met, it is essential that the wages of capital should be fairly fixed. Investors cannot be drawn to a pasture if it becomes arid. Fourteen hundred thousand homes in the United States are unwired and will be furnished with electric service, which needed by new capital induced to work for "fair wages." More than 1,500,000 homes, 500,000 factories, 5,000 churches, 60,000 apartment buildings, 25,000 theatres and 5,000 public schools must be built to take care of increased population. Vast new equipment must be added, and a tremendous investment made by the electric light and power companies, to keep pace with the nation's progress. This can be done only through general understanding of the problems of the electrical industry.
