

It Paid Him to Sow Early

Raleigh, N. C., Oct. 25.—Wheat planted in October has given better yields in North Carolina than wheat planted in November. This has been the result of experiments by the research workers of State College and now comes the evidence directly from good farmers in the State.

"L. L. Miller of Davie County secured a premium of six bushels of wheat per acre by sowing in October as compared to sowings made in November," says E. C. Blair, extension agronomist at State College. "Mr. Miller began to plant a field of sixteen acres on October 15 last year. After he had planted some eight acres, rain drove him out of the field and frequent other rains kept him from finishing the job until about November 15. The remainder of the field was planted between November 15 and 20."

As the wheat ripened this spring, states Mr. Blair, it was noticed by Mr. Miller that there was a decided difference in the two plantings. Mr. Miller therefore decided to cut and thresh them separately. The land sowed at the two intervals was also measured accurately. The early sowing yielded wheat at the rate of 23 bushels per acre. There was no difference in the soil, in the fertilizer used nor in the seed planted. The increase of six bushels was due entirely, states Mr. Blair, to the fact that the plot was planted earlier than the other.

Mr. Blair states that some farmers may be undecided about sowing until there has been a good drain, but where the seed bed can be properly prepared, the wheat should be planted at once. When rains come, the land may be kept wet for two or three weeks which will be too late for best yields. An experimental work shows that late-sown wheat never yields as well as that planted between October 20 and November 1.

It is a crime against childhood not to have a family cow on the farm.

"I changed from feeding four bags 16% dairy feed per week to three bags Tuxedo Dairy 24% at your suggestion. Now I pay $1.10 less for feed and get three gallons more milk every week. I unhesitatingly recommend Tuxedo Dairy 24%."

Mrs. A. Graves, Fredricksburg, Virginia.

"We recently completed a ten month test on Majesty's Cloture 41863, a 7-year-old Jersey with Ce-re-a-lia Sweets 20% as basis of ration. During this period, she produced 12,400 lbs. of milk and 53.2 lbs. of butter fat. She milked 48 lbs. on the last day of her test. I am well pleased with Ce-re-a-lia Sweets."
