Editors of The Tar Heel.

Gentlemen:—Of course we do not know who wrote "Honi Soit Qui Mal y Pense" in your last issue, but we think of several very attractive young ladies in the State who are just about the age mentioned, and one of them writes poetry. On the strength of this, the following lines are respectfully dedicated to "X. Y. Z."—Freshman.

The Adventures of Love.

Venus lost her magic girdle
After Juno sent it back,
And when Vulcan now is "scundered"
She must "Take another Tack."

Cupid stole it—little rascal—
And goes roaming o'er the earth
Seeking symmetry more perfect
Than was hers who gave him birth.

Over many lands he'd flitted,
Even Psyche passing by,
When a maiden's form amazed him,
And with ardor made him sigh.

She is picking daisies slowly.
By a pool of crystal clear,
And the picture in its waters
Would to Zeno bring a tear.

Cupid diving headlong in it,
Finds reflection is a "fake,"
But emerging near the daisies,
Learns the cause of his mistake.

Psyche, Venus, and the Graces,
With their beauties all combined,
He was sure, could never rival
Such as now he saw outlined,

In persona, right before him,
Of a "symphony in black"—
'Twas too much for little Cupid
And he couldn't turn his back!

So, delighted to have found it,
After searching low and high,
He has tied the ribbon round it,
In the twinkling of an eye.

Then indeed, a strange thing happened,
But the reason here we find;
Just to get him back to heaven,
They were 'bliged to make him blind.

Ever since, our dainty maiden,
Out of kindness, as you see,
Has to wear her pretty dresses
Very far below the knee!

For if Aphrodite's girdle
Should be visible to men,
There's no counting up the numbers
Would be broken-hearted then.

E'en a daisy who spied it,
Watched it neatly put in place,
Was "right quickly" turned to silver,
'Cause he couldn't hide his face.

But his little heart's not hardened,
And it will not soon grow cold,
If he sometimes may be near her
With the ribbon blue enrolled.

The "General Grumbler" hasn't said anything lately, because, for a wonder, he's seen nothing to grumble about. Now, however, he has something to say, and takes this method of saying it. He went into Memorial Hall the other day and there he saw a lot of penciled foolishness, and several names written on the tablets there embedded in the wall. Some one evidently knew he'd never receive any recognition there except that, and so he tried to make himself notorious that way. What sort of an animal is this that desecrates the memorial tablets of men to whose standard he can never attain? Can't we cage it, or shoot it, or do something else to get it out of the way? The better spirits of our University ought to down such things and do it now. We've outgrown the scribbling age, we hope, and if we haven't, we ought to have sense enough not to give way to that sort of monomania.

There's another thing that struck the "General Grumbler" the other day as being unworthy of such an institution as ours. He was walking through the campus when all of a sudden some one raised a cry which was taken up by fifty other voices, and the burden of that cry was, "Angels in the campus!" Some ladies were taking a walk through the campus, and fifty students, without any provocation, took this very delicate and polite way of welcoming them to our grounds. It is an old and time honored custom, we know, but, in the eyes of sensible men, that doesn't make it any better. The "General Grumbler" thinks this should be stopped. Its neither manly, nor polite, to try to embarrass our visitors this way. We wouldn't do it in our own homes, and why should we do such things at our temporary home where we are supposed to come to represent the life of the State in miniature? It is directly opposed to the spirit of the old Southern chivalry of which we are so proud, and which we try to maintain as best we can. The custom can be stopped if the men who disapprove it only have the backbone to show their disapproval.

Yours for grumbling,
"GENERAL GRUMBLER."
