A Present to Dr. Manning.

At a meeting of the law class last Friday afternoon. Those members of the class were to leave for Raleigh the next morning presented Dr. Manning with a handsome present, as a token of their love and esteem.

Mr. John Cook, of Laurinburg, in a behalf of the class, presented the gift, which was a large rug fourteen feet square. His speech was short and simple, and yet a master piece of genuine eloquence. He spoke of the love borne by every member of the class for their faithful instructor, and referred to the gift as being symbolic of the attitude of those who gave it-at his feet. Mr Cook possesses a voice naturally very pathetic, and it was made more so by the occasion. He spoke from his own heart and from the heart of every member of the class and when he had finished there was many a moist eye in the room.

Dr. Manning then arose and made a speech that was well worth hearing. For thirty or forty minutes, he spoke as a father would speak to his children, pointing out to them the way of true and noble living. He spoke of the dignity of the lawyer's profession, and of the responsibility that rested on these young men to uphold that dignity. He admonished them to stick to the right through fortnue and adversity, and to so conduct themselves as to bring honor on themselves and on the profession.

It was indeed touching to see the grand old man, who had had the experience of a long and successful life, who had been able to distinguish the real from the unreal-to look below the surface and to see the many substant al things of life-to see him standing before that body of young men, who were about to try the sea of real life, thus counseling and advising them.

And when he had finished and the boys came to say good-bye, each one felt that he was parting with a friend that was a friend indeed.

And each one wished that he might live a life that would inspire the love and command the respect that is accorded Dr. Manning.

The wonderful progress made during the last week by the applicants for the foot ball team is very gratifying to the students. The men are getting quicker on their feet aud are getting over their softness brought on by high living and dissipation during the summer. Some new men of great promise have appeared among us. The out look is that the '98 team will leave an enviable record behind.
