January Magazine.

The January number of the Magazine is up to the usual standard—some of the articles are of real merit.—The opening biographical sketch is too severe—"Pussy" is dealt with in a manner that makes known to all who "Pussy" is.—One would suspect from the tone of the article that the writer was not like "Pussy" but was "vindictive"—Perhaps Mr. Thobson has been unwittingly by "Pussy" in some political scheme, and is taking revenge by writer a character sketch. The biography makes plain the fact that whoever "Pussy" may be, or whoever "Thobson" is, he was certainly "seedy" enough to get done up by Pussy in some late political squabble. Unrest Seedy Thobson is evidently smarting under defeat.

The same gentlemen does not seem to write with the same vitriolic pen when he reaches "Rooster" But the pen picture of "Rooster" is good.

Both the sketches are well written and show that the writer has considerable ability as an allegorical writer. We hope the next number will contain biographies of some of the other species in the University museum.

"Giles Mebane" is a well written sketch of a man who was prominent in the affairs of the State for many years. The writer introduces the subject of his sketch at once. The proper thing to do in a short biography. The Magazine would do well, we venture to suggest, to have a sketch of some North Carolinian who was prominent in his day, in each number.

It is evident from what "Romanus" says that he has his own idea as to who caused the death of of the language that is now a "dead language." It is an exceedingly well-written article, and there are many things in it that the preparatory schools of the State would do well to consider. We heartily agree with him in denouncing a study of Latin Grammars. They are reference books. If "Romanus" teaches as well as he writes, and were such as he teaching in the preparatory schools of the State, the University could send out some Latin scholars.

The poem—Prose—does a good deal like some of Thomas More's—But he will bear imitation.

The author of the sketch on Thomas H. Benton shows that he doesn't know just where to begin, or that he is a little afraid to plunge in medias res. But after he makes his beginning he seems to be more at ease. The author shows that he is prepared to write a good deal more than he does. In fact the sketch seems not quite full enough. It doesn't tell us enough about the man. But all who are interested in the great men North Carolina has given to other states should read "Thomas H. Benton;" for he is one of the greatest.

The best thing in the Magazine perhaps is the editorial on College politics. It is a fair and able discussion, and all the students would do well to read it.

"Literary Notes" show that the editor of that department is doing his full duty.

The exchange editor always has something to say—something worth the saying—and in this number he says it as happily as usual.

"Alumniana" introduces a new feature this time—the eulogistic—and the portrative.

fifteen hundred years before the Christian era.

He gave early theories and treatment of the disease which were absurd.

Inoculation was first known at the beginning of the 18th century. Smallpox is infectious and contagious, but the nature of smallpox contagion is not known.

There are three ways of treating the disease.

- 1 Inoculation.
- 2 Inoculation and isolation.
- 3 Vaccination.

He described and defined each and showed how efficient vaccination is.

The last paper was by Prof. Gore on "Steam Engine—A return to the first type." The early steam engine consisted of a cylinder with movable piston, under which was water and fire. He told of the several improvements and advancements and said that the very latest engine is in a manner like these earliest engines. He described the rotary steam engine, but said they were not very useful.

All of the papers were excellent ones and profitable questions arose from each.
