ANOTHER DEFEAT.

V. P. I. Puts it on Carolina by a Score of 21 to 0. A Detailed Account of the Game.

Carolina met her second severe defeat of the season at Norfolk, Va., last Saturday. The Norfolk Landmark says: "The score 21 to 0 by no means indicates the pluck and spirit with which North Carolina contested with V. P. I. on the gridiron at La Fayette Field for foot ball supremacy yesterday afternoon;" and this is true. The Tar Heels fought well but the superior team work and impregnable interference of V. P. I. was too much for them.

Conspicuous above the remainder of the aggregation that struggled upon the checkerboard shone the work of Carpenter for V. P. I. Seldom has such playing been seen on any gridiron. As a half-back this man undoubtedly stands in a class by himself in the South; there is not another man who can approach him. Four of Blacksburg's very best men, including Carpenter, who were not in the game with Virginia on account of injuries, or State's rules, played against Carolina and though this fact does not account for the defeat of the Tar Heels, it undoubtedly had something to do with the size of the score.

While the Tar Heels did good individual work, they seemed to lack team work and failed to work together. Stewart, Foust, Donnelly, Mann and Berkeley did good work.

He is tackled about six times but continues to run. When tackled last time he falls on the goal line, after 3 minutes of play. Cox and Mann are hurt but continue to play. V. P. I. has to kick out and succeeds. She now tries at goal and fails.

I. was off side and the ball is brought back to V. P. I.'s 45-yard line and given to Carolina.

SECOND HALF.

V. P. I. has a faster team than we have and Carpenter is in a class all to himself. His offensive work is superb. Our boys are not playing at all together. Carolina kicks to V. P. LECTURE BY DR. RUFFIN.

Dr. Thos. Ruffin Lectures in Gerrard Hall on "The Common Sense of Law."

Dr. Thos. Ruffin, of the University Law School, delivered a public lecture last Thursday evening in Gerrard Hall. His subject was: "The Common Sense of Law." This he handled in a very practical and common sense way. He began by saying: "Many people think of law as something apart from them, and they fail to have the proper respect for it. All society must have laws to govern its individuals. Formerly society was ruled by custom, and when a custom became clearly defined it became a law. Laws are not stationary but they progress as the people progress. From time to time the code is changed. A few years ago two hundred crimes were punishable by death, a woman was nothing more than a chattel, the oldest son inherited all the goods, and trials were often by combat or ordeals.

"These are now foreign to our rights. The change has been brought about through a natural process based on the common sense of the people. Law registers the change and so reflects the moral life of the people. Our laws are given us by trained men except our statute laws, which are made by the representatives of the people. Sometimes statute laws conflict with the constitution, when they do they are not laws.

"Common law is the unwritten law. It may be replaced at any time by statute law. The object of all law is common sense equality. It guarantees life, property, reputation and freedom of thought. It secures the right and redresses the wrong. It regulates civil acts, not moral ones."

Dr. Ruffin spoke of wrongs under three heads, viz., crime, torts and contracts; crimes as wrongs that affect the State, torts the individuals, and contracts personal agreement. He spoke of the laws concerning wills, deeds and the transfer of lands, and of their development. "The seeming injustice of the law is due more to jurists than to any fault of the law."

He concluded by saying: "A truly great lawyer can be made only out of a good and great man. Law leads a man to honesty, truth and morality. The lawyers are a noble set of men though often slandered. They fashion, make and apply laws to suit the high and low, the rich and the poor. They direct the course of civilization."

The question at the Di. Saturday night was: Resolved, that further annexation of territory is not for the best interest of this country. The affirmative won and Mr. Duls, '07, was reported best speaker
