AYCOCK MEMORIAL SERVICES

These were not essentially new ideas, but Aycock made them his own. Aycock was an incarnate idea, he was possessed of a dominating passion that drove him on. In the fulness of time he brought all his powers to bear on this idea that education is the main business of the State. As a practical politician he saw that education must be brought into politics. He therefore made the Constitutional Amendment a basis of an educational propaganda. The long delayed movement for popular education became allied with practical politics. This was his great service to education.

Mr. C. W. Tillett spoke on Governor Aycock, the man in public life. He came not to prate of moral lessons but to speak of a friend, a friend whose faith was great, whose hope was inspiring, and whose love was beautiful. He came to answer the question "what is the University doing for the State?" by pointing to the man—better than all words, maxims, philosophies—The Man.

Aycock was no paragon, no "holier than thou" saint, in him was none of the pride of humility. He lived close to the people, in touch with their infirmities, their wants, their sufferings. He touched earth often, but always arose with new strength. He was a rare combination of love and strength—the love of a child, the strong hate of wrong.

As a man in public life he was a great lawyer, able, fearless, eloquent. In all things he was obedient to his oath. As governor he upheld the dignity and reputation of the State. He discharged his duties with an eye single to the public good. And he immortalized himself by doing most to obliterate the stain of ignorance on the fair name of the State.

But this was not the lesson of Aycock's life that Mr. Tillett came to give. Aycock was a politician, more than once a candidate for public office. With eloquence he set forth on many platforms the doctrines of his party. The wonder of it all is that, although he stirred the enthusiasm of all, he never resorted to political frauds or chicanery. He was no sounding brass of hypocrisy nor tinkling cymbal of demagoguery. The lesson of Aycock's life is that in North Carolina it is not necessary to be a hypocrite and a demagogue to be a great public leader. His life shows that a man may have a mastery over the public heart without hypocrisy.

"He died in the discharge of his duty. His life sank beneath the horizon, but already it has risen, renewed, brightened, to shine in eternal day".

ORGANIZATION OF PRESS MEN

Mitchell, of the University of South Carolina; first vice-president, Sam Latimer, Jr., of the University of South Carolina; second vice-president, George P. Waller, Jr., of the University of Virginia; corresponding secretary, Brevard D. Stephenson, of the University of North Carolina; recording secretary, R. B. Jackson, of William and Mary; treasurer, J. M. Workman, of Clemson. An executive committee, with the first vice-president ex-officio chairman, was appointed by the president consisting of John H. Kangeter of Clemson, C. J. Hearsay of Clemson, Benton H. Walton of University of Georgia, and M. A. Wright of University of South Carolina.

A number of papers were read by delegates, to whom a main address was delivered Wednesday night by Dr. Charles W. Kent, head of the English department of the University of Virginia. The delegates also had the pleasure of listening to Messrs. McDavid Horton and John S. Reynolds of the Columbia State, W. R. Starr, managing editor of the Columbia Daily Record, Dr. Henry A. White, and Dr. Edward S. Joynes. Prof. Yates Snowden was toastmaster at the banquet, and the opening session of the convention was presided over by Mr. R. E. Gonzales, of the Columbia State, until Mr. Waller, of Virginia, was elected temporary chairman.
