DI SOCIETY

Many tales are told of the brilliant exploits of Carolina men in the historic halls of the Di Society in days gone by. Within those walls young statesmen have practiced their art of oratory upon their innocent fellow members. There have been many important matters decided in these famous walls by men who astonished and bewildered their audiences with the force and power of their oratorical abilities. However, one meeting of the society will always stand out clearly in the minds of loyal Di men as a landmark of live and critical days of our life on the Hill during the spring of 1919, for at this time there was a question of great import to be decided. That matter was in regard to the granting of an associate editorship on the Yackety Yack board to the co-eds.

Before the forum on the Yackety Yack was opened, the program of the evening was rendered. A debate on the question of the city manager plan of government for North Carolina towns of over four thousand population was held. The affirmative team was successful in proving that such a plan would be best. The men making the best speeches were, Person, of the affirmative, and Crawford, of the negative.

At the conclusion of this program, discussion on the matter of granting an associate editorship on the Yackety Yack board to the co-eds was opened. This debate lasted for two or three hours, and would in all probability have continued longer had not action been taken to close it. All of those present showed great interest in the argument advanced by the supporters and opponents of the measure. It was very evident that every man had been thinking about the proposition before he came to the hall. Many technicalities and rules of parliamentary law came into play during the evening. Speakers showed their cool headedness by standing up under the attacks of opponents who strove to shake their argument. After a long and heated discussion, a vote was taken. By a careful count, it was found that the proposed measure giving the co-eds this editorship had failed to secure its required support.

Captain John Smith invented the motion picture drama in 1807. There were no camera men to shoot the actors in those days but that was not Smith's fault nor theirs.

First Fresh: "And how is Jones this morning?"

Second Fresh: "Sure, he's recuperating."

First Fresh: "Good Lord, do you think he will get over it?"

Soph: "And is that prof. a pretty good scate?"

Ditto: "Can't say, I never saw him

The coed tells what a man must have or not have to win her heart:

"He must not drink, smoke, chew, gamble or stay out late at nights. He must take an interest in his home; he must have a good position and be well liked by all those with whom he comes in touch (men of course) and he "just must" possess a winning personality. It is to be understood that he must be tall, handsome, have blue eyes and black curly hair."

"And now," queried the patriotic speaker fervently, "now, I say—what motives are taking our young men to the fighting line?"

"Locomotives," drawled the freshman in the rear.
