Many New Periodicals Are Among Library's List

Within the last month the library has added to its reading room stock several new magazines, among them some which might well receive special notice.

"Asia," the American magazine on the orient, is an unusually well printed and illustrated journal giving information from the eastern viewpoint. Articles are given on various ancient and famous industries such as rug-weaving, wood-carving and pottery making as now carried on. Some of the contributors are of Asiatic blood themselves and all have a broad background of personal experience to draw from.

"Factory" is another very attractive magazine and one which in its function of an industrial digest is likely to prove itself popular. It takes up questions of industrial management and also illustrates the use of the most up-to-date machinery.

"The English Journal" is the official organ of the national council of teachers of English. "Journalistic Writing in High Schools and Colleges," "Some Types of Public Speech," and "Supervision of School Publications" are some of the titles which we find on its table of contents.

The "Manchester Guardian" is a weekly paper coming directly from England, and one which for some reason seems to be little read by the student body. Its articles on the railway situation, for example, give a view which we do not get elsewhere.

The Manufacturers' Record is devoted to the upbuilding of the nation through the development of the South and the Southwest as the nation's greatest material asset. Besides modern industrial equipment it gives some attention to agriculture.

The nature of Sunset is well expressed in the title of its editorial page "The Pulse of the Pacific." It is a very attractive magazine concerned with questions of national interest as well as those of the West.

The Southern Review is a new magazine published at Asheville, N. C. It aims to be "a call for constructive thinking in the South." Its purpose is to crystallize and give expression to the best in Southern thought in politics, economics, education, literature and criticism. Among its list of contributors are the familiar names of Dr. C. Alphonso Smith, Dr. Edwin A. Alderman and others.

The Journal of Commerce is a daily paper recently added for the benefit of the School of Commerce. It is published at New York and it the leading business man's paper.

Just Gossip

A tense silence. The stands that were surging with thousands of enthusiastic fans encircled the field upon which the great contest was soon to be pulled off. The big bowl was packed to its capacity, and hundreds were standing up around the edge of the field. Notwithstanding the greatness of the crowd, not a sound could be heard. It was as if a deadly gas had suddenly snuffed out the lives of those present in the stands and had left them in their original positions.

It was the moment just before the contest. This explained their silence. Every one was straining to get the first glimpse of the contestants as they trotted out on the field.

At last they appeared! The great throng burst into shouts of enthusiasm. The crowd was transformed into a shouting, singing, madly yelling mob of joyous fans.

The judges and the timekeepers took their places. The referee and the umpire walked out upon the field. The players had already taken their places and all was ready. The shrill blow of a whistle sounded, and the great game was on! The stands were shrieking! Pep was overflowing. For an hour the game was anybody's game. Nobody could foresee the outcome. It was 50-50 all the way through.

And then the final whistle blew! The score stood 9 to 7.

"Good gosh! Teeny," said Beef Ketchy, as they walked off the field "if you hadn't rung that last one, I would have beat you sure!"

"Well, anyway, it was the best game of horseshoes I ever played since I was a kitten," replied Teeny, wiping the dust off his hands.
