

TRACK COACHES ARE NOT IMPEDED BY BAD WEATHER

Cinder Path Was Clear of Snow By Three O'clock Yesterday.

MEN WORKOUT IN GYM

Coach Fetzer Wants More Candidates for Field Events.

While the University and community have been snow-bound and football and baseball practice at a standstill, the track coaches have been putting the men through regular work-outs in the gym. A corps of workers have been busily engaged in clearing the outdoor track of its white blanket and at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the cinder path was cleared and ready for the runners.

Coach Ranson states that he has a very energetic bunch out for the track events this year, but so far only a few candidates have reported for the field events on both the varsity and freshman squads. The first meet of the season comes the 28th of this month when Carolina meets Duke University. Following the Duke meet, the track squad will be faced with a very heavy schedule which calls for an average of about one meet each week until the Conference Championship which will be held at Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge, La., on May 13th and 14th. Indications are that with the exception of the field events the team this year will be as strong as in the past and the coaches urge that more men come out and try for the field events. Anyone interested in the shot put, discus throw, javelin throw, pole vault, high jump, and broad jump is urged to come out.

Coach Bob Fetzer stated yesterday afternoon that the reports from Atlanta in regard to the Annual Tech Relay Meet which will be held at Georgia Tech on April 9th, indicate that the relays this season will be the best ever held. The four-mile relay team representing Carolina has won this event for the past two years. However, the relay team this year will have to overcome some stiff opposition if it carries off the four mile conference title and brings the cup back to Chapel Hill.

Dean Paulsen and Grady Pritchard Mix In Big Snow Battle

Dean Paulsen of Laundry fame and poet extraordinaire of the "Smoke Screen," is also a handy man when it comes to moving snow, or washing it away as it were. Now that sounds funny. But it actually happened. City manager Knox and some street hands turned a fire hose on the banks of snow that the road scraper had moved near the curb in front of the Smoke Shop and Stetson "D's" place and as a result the drifts started moving into the sewer. Several student onlookers had assembled and were watching the men paddle like children in the melting snow.

The work was progressing with the usual quietness which characterizes most forms of manual labor until some devilish stude soaked the Dean on the chest with a snow-ball. Grady Pritchard who had come out to represent Pritchard-Patterson's on the field of battle, was greeted also with a spherical missile of snow. A regular snow battle seemed at hand, but it proceeded no further than a skirmish between Dean Paulsen and Grady Pritchard.

Nevertheless the snow is gone from that part of the town and autos are parked in regular order.

WOMEN VOTERS TO BE HERE THURSDAY

North Carolina League Will Hold Its Annual Convention at Carolina Inn.

The North Carolina League of Women Voters will begin its seventh annual convention in Chapel Hill next Thursday morning at 10 o'clock at the Carolina Inn. The sessions will last through Saturday morning. They are open not only to league members but to everybody else who may want to attend.

After an address of welcome by Robert B. House at the first gathering, and a response by Mrs. G. F. Gold, the organization will proceed to the transaction of routine business, receiving reports from the president, the treasurer, and the executive secretary.

The school of citizenship will be conducted along with the convention. Its first meeting will take place at noon Thursday, when E. J. Woodhouse will talk on "The Salient Features of the 1927 Legislature." The school will convene once more on that day and twice on Friday.

At five o'clock in the afternoon on Thursday there will be a campus tour under the direction of Collier Cobb. This will be followed, at seven o'clock, by a dinner with Mrs. Julius W. Cone as toastmistress.

The University will entertain the visitors Friday afternoon with a drive around the village. This begins at four o'clock, and at about half past four the Community Club will entertain at tea at the Episcopal parish house. All the members are urged to be present to welcome the visitors.

Miss Belle Sherwin, president of the National League of Women Voters, will make an address at the luncheon Friday, her topic being "The League of Women Voters—an Experiment in Patriotism." She will be introduced by Mrs. Archibald Henderson, the first president of the North Carolina Woman Suffrage Association.

Thursday afternoon's session will be devoted to talks on social and political matters.

Freshmen Harriers To Meet Charlotte

Events Will Be Held on Emerson Field if Weather Will Permit.

The freshman track team will meet the Charlotte high school here next Saturday, March 12, if the snow clears away enough to allow the meet to be held. Tryouts for the various events were scheduled to take place yesterday and today, but were postponed on account of the condition of the track.

The ability shown by the freshmen in the indoor track meet which will be held in the Tin Can on Wednesday night will in a large way determine the holders of the places on the freshman squad.

"Thrice Promised Bride" Played At the High School

The Chapel Hill high school presented the "Thrice Promised Bride" in the school auditorium Tuesday evening. It was given under the direction of Miss Nellie Graves and Mrs. William Olsen. In the cast were Rena Henry, Minnie Sue Sides, Lawrence Patten, Fred Patterson, William McKee, Robert Coker, Claude Council, Frederick Steiner, Ralph Munch and Billy Reynolds.

Bradshaw Urges Students To Secure Loans Early

Dean Bradshaw urges that students who wish to make loans from the University at the end of this quarter or the beginning of the next should see him immediately. This will avoid the usual rush and general confusion at the beginning of each quarter.

Fraternity Animosity, Licker and Democracy Added Zest To Early Political Rule

University began to fill up with sons of farmers, merchants, and other professional men. However, the influence of the Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies, composed as they were of both elements of the students, tended to turn the stream of politics into other channels. The two societies controlled the campus and the election of all officers. At that time the best political "plums" were the offices of chief marshal, chief ball manager, and commencement speakers from each society.

The winter of 1880 witnessed a regular political campaign with all the accouterments of party tickets, caucusses, and heated campaigning. At this period the dormitories were divided between Di and Phi members, the former occupying Old West, New West, and the west end of South while the latter was entrenched in Old East, New East, and east end of South. Each of these buildings was thoroughly organized into strong factions; Charles Brantley Aycock organizing South, Henry

E. Faison Old East, and Charley McIver Old West.

About this time three fraternities had been established sub rosa at the University and had taken over politics from the old parties. Everything had to be done very quietly for fraternities were still forbidden.

Fraternity control awoke opposition, and in the fall of 1894 a strong non-fraternity party was organized under the militant leadership of Leonard Charles VanNoppen and Charles Leonard VanNoppen, of Greensboro. Their political organ was "The White and Blue," a weekly newspaper published in opposition to the TAR HEEL. Leonard C. VanNoppen was the first editor, and serving as assistants were Thomas J. Wilson, H. E. C. Bryant, and J. O. Carr. This publication declared that the TAR HEEL was controlled by fraternity men and published exclusively in the interests of athletics, that the Hellenian (the predecessor of the present Yackety Yack) was controlled by fraternities, and "that these publications give the impression that fraternity men are the only students at the University." "The White and Blue" waged a bitter war upon fraternities, labeling them a disintegrating influence upon the campus and appealing to the trustees of the University to abolish such pernicious organizations.

The fraternities gave out a list of their members, which included so many prominent students, including the sons of the president, that the trustees decided to take no action. After this the fraternities got the upper hand again and remained in supreme control until about 1900 when the non-fraternity faction, under the skilful leadership of Edgar D. Broadhurst, of Greensboro, came back into control and secured every political office for three years except one class presidency.

During this whole period feeling between the two rival factions ran high and often ended in fist encounters. In the elections every possible effort was made to secure victory and not every effort could be called perfectly honest and above board. Frame-ups, swaps, and hand-outs were familiar aspects of the situation.

Prior to 1899 positions as University debaters were usually dished out as political plums by aspiring politicians; often the senior debaters were chosen secretly as early as their sophomore year. In '99 a fight was made to have these men selected by competition. A hard struggle it proved to be, but it was carried through by such men as E. D. Broadhurst and W. S. Bernard. The matter was debated in the societies for the entire year but finally passed through drastic measures were necessary. One member, Phillip Busbee, was sick and had to be hurriedly dressed and taken to the hall in order to make the vote a tie; then the president, Junius Grimes, cast the deciding vote for competitive selection.

In 1900 there was a very stiff fight waged over the position of chief ball manager. The Zeta Psi's formed a coalition with the non-fraternity men in which the Zeta Phi's were to get the ball manager and the presidency of the senior class, while all other officers were to be non-fraternity men. This secret trade became known, however, and the other frats organized at the S. A. E. house and made plans for a hot race. Voting could be done by proxy at that time, so the latter party made out a number of blank proxies dated the day of the election, went through the dormitories on a cold, rainy night and collected enough proxies to secure a two-thirds majority vote. This election was challenged and another held. Wealthy men on both sides flooded the campus with "election liquor," and the new vote was taken with half the students drunk.

The two junior orders, Gimgouls and Gorgon's Head were struggling for the ascendancy in athletic control and were, together with the fraternities, largely responsible for corruption in the athletic situation in attempts to control the election of captains and officers of the athletic association.

I've got a half-nelson
on jimmy-pipe joy

I TOOK P. A. for better or worse . . . and found it better! Better than anything I had ever smoked. That's my story and I'm going to stick to it. When siren-brands try to flirt, I just give them the Frigidstaire. I know what I like in a pipe, and what I like is Prince Albert!

The instant you break the seal on the tidy red tin and get that wonderful fragrance of real tobacco, you know you are in for a pipe-treat. Your mouth fairly waters for a taste of tobacco that smells as good as that. Then you load up and light up—ah! . . .

Cool. Sweet. Fragrant. Old words, I'll admit, but you get a brand-new idea of how much they can mean in a pipe-bowl packed with P. A. Maybe you've always thought such pipe-pleasure was "just around the corner." Try a load of Prince Albert and turn that corner!

PRINCE ALBERT

—no other tobacco is like it!

P. A. is sold everywhere in tidy red tins, pound and half-pound tin humidors, and pound crystal-glass humidors with sponge-moistener top. And always with every bit of bite and punch removed by the Prince Albert process.
