there on the steps stood his mother waiting in a gay print dress, and his sister, grown up but still the same. He saw them as the cab rounded the last corner, and his happiness welled up and crowded out in its eager mood the previous mood of reminiscent melancholy. Of course he was here, of course it was real.

He leaped from the cab and swept his mother and sister into his arms. "Mother," he said, "I almost didn't make it."

Attractive Wave Teaches Pre-Flight Course

By Nancy C. Kennickell

U. S. Navy Pre-Flight School at Chapel Hill has as a member of the staff of the navigation department, Ensign Betty Crawford, an attractive hazel-eyed midwestern Kansas girl.

Had this young lady come to Carolina in peace time, it would not have been an easy matter to keep order in her classes, but under the Navy V-5 program, strict naval rules must be observed or Ensign Betty Crawford may pull her rank on the potential flyers and the result is two hours of drill on Saturday afternoon. However the flashing smile that reflects so well her sparkling personality is something to remember even when a cadet is compelled to spend his Saturday liberty drilling on the base.

Betty Crawford hails from Kansas, the state of golden wheat fields and blue skies. She attended the local high school at Salina and then matriculated at Kansas Wesleyan College, where she majored in English literature and home economics. Although not yet war-minded, Betty took civilian pilot training offered her junior year at college. Following graduation in June, 1943, Betty, having sixty hours of flying to her credit and a private license, abandoned her literary career and thought of joining the ferrying command. Parental objections soon persuaded her to drop the idea and she entered the WAVES in December, 1943.

Miss Crawford received her naval training at the Woman's Reserve Midshipman School at Northampton, Massachusetts, and was commissioned February 8, 1944. She, and three other WAVES out of a class of approximately 350, were sent to the Naval Air Navigation School at Hollywood, Florida. After completing a four-months course in navigation there, she arrived at her present station at the Pre-Flight School.

All cadet sources say Ensign Crawford ranks "Four-O" as a navigation teacher, the navy's way of saying she is tops. Outside the classroom, she loves swimming and has even taken cross-country hikes and says she plans to do the obstacle course next.

When asked about post-war plans, she said, "Since entering the WAVES, I have thought a great deal about flying and hope to be an instructor in some college offering civilian pilot training after the war. I am interested in navigation, but I am becoming more air-minded every day."

Thursday Is Deadline For Gym Exemptions

The applications will then be referred to a committee, which will decide upon individual exemptions. It was emphasized, however, that only extreme instances will be considered.
